Hansen sues Poly, state

Former volleyball star says school liable in '91 shooting

By Marla R. Van Schuyver
Staff Writer

It has been said that time heals all wounds.

But for Michelle Hansen — a Cal Poly graduate and former volleyball player — money is the cure being sought.

Hansen recently filed a civil lawsuit in San Luis Obispo County Superior Court against Cal Poly, the State of California, her former teammate, friend and lover Kimberly Kaaiai and two other defendants.

The amount being sought in the lawsuit has not yet been determined, but Hansen sought $10 million for personal damages in a request she filed with the California State University Board of Trustees last March.

The claim was rejected by the board, leaving the lawsuit as Hansen's only course for obtaining money from Cal Poly and the State of California.

Hansen was shot in the back on the night of Dec. 18, 1991, in her darkened apartment after a scuffle with Kaaiai. Minutes after the shooting, Kaaiai called 911, then turned the gun on herself in a failed suicide attempt.

Kaaiai stood trial last spring for attempted murder and was found innocent. It was never determined if Kaaiai willfully shot Hansen or if the gun accidentally fired during the scuffle.

Several witnesses testified that the women fought often. Kaaiai claimed that the fights were a result of her objections to Hansen's alleged cocaine abuse.

Investigation reports revealed there were traces of cocaine in Hansen's body on the night she was shot.

The fights between the two had so affected their performances on the volleyball team in the fall of 1991 that head coach Craig Cummings forced Kaaiai to sign a contract saying she would stay away from Hansen or be thrown off the team.

But both women testified in March 1992 that they continued to see each other anyway.

President's popularity could plunge

Cal Poly political science professors say the first 100 days will be crucial

By Dawn Sievers
Staff Writer

President Bill Clinton's courtship with America has ended — and the honeymoon has begun.

But just how long will it last? Cal Poly political science professor Carroll McKibbin says Clinton's popularity is likely to decrease over the next 100 days.

"Campaigns are times when people running for office exaggerate what they're going to be able to do," McKibbin said. "But the reality is it's very difficult to be the president."

McKibbin said the popularity of a president-elect almost always decreases after the inauguration.

But fellow political science professor John Culver, said he believes Clinton's high rating will linger.

"The public is hopeful," Culver said. "It's pretty likely his popularity will stay."

Culver said in order for Clinton to retain his positive image in the next 100 days, there must be cooperation by Congress, an economic program that is not "too excessive," and no embarrassing scandals within his cabinet.

"If Clinton doesn't deliver, his popularity will plummet," Culver said.

But Culver added he is optimistic Clinton will perform well.

Poly political science professor Phil Fetzter agreed that the first 100 days will be tough for Clinton.

"His approval rating is good coming in," he said. "But people are skeptical and anxious."

Fetzter said the main issues during this honeymoon of the presidency will be health care, political campaign reform, linking support for education and national service, and creating job programs.

Fetzter said the economic issue

ASI looks at ropes course

By Marla R. Van Schuyver
Staff Writer

A resolution for ASI to sponsor a leadership-promoting ropes course prompted the longest discussion in the hour-long Board of Directors meeting Wednesday night.

The ropes course would cost ASI approximately $3,000 and could be built and maintained by volunteers, according to Joey Acayan, the resolution's sponsor.

The site for the course has not been determined, but a particular site on Cal Poly property, six miles from the main campus near Cuesta College, is being considered.

Acayan said a ropes course teaches leadership and trust skills, essential to working with others. He said he also believes that many campus organizations would be interested in utilizing a ropes facility.

"A few years ago ASI passed a resolution to implement a leadership program — Winners in Training — and I was part of that program," Acayan said. "When I went through that program, I got a lot of leadership and interpersonal skills."

U.S. jets fire on Iraqi sites; U.N. inspectors in Baghdad

Baghdad, Iraq

The cease-fire proclaimed by Iraq as a "good will gesture" to President Clinton broke down Thursday after just one day, but U.N. officials said that should not hinder the resumption of weapons inspections.

Iraq issued no immediate statement on U.S. planes bombing an air defense radar site that U.S. officials said "locked on" allied planes patrolling over northern Iraq. Pentagon officials said Iraqi anti-aircraft guns also shot at the allied planes.

It was unclear if Baghdad was testing Clinton's resolve or if the Iraqi action was an error. The government had said Tuesday its forces would stop shooting at allied planes.

Saddam Hussein's government announced Thursday it is reopening a Baghdad powdered milk plant that U.S. officials say was a cover for biological weapons production. The factory was destroyed in the early days of the Persian Gulf War two years ago.

Schoolchildren gathered at the Abu Ghreib factory site Thursday, shouting "Down with Bush!" and "We want milk!" Iraqi officials said the plant would resume milk production in about a month.

"The basis is there to open a new page in Iraqi-American relations and to prepare for the Clinton administration to study the lifting of the illegal air embargo."

Army newspaper Al-Qudissiya

On Wednesday, Saddam ordered the reconstruction of a machine-tool factory that was seriously damaged by U.S. cruise missiles on Sunday night. The Bush administration said the plant at Zaafaraniyeh, just south of Baghdad, was an important part of Iraq's nuclear program.

Reports of the hostilities Thursday came a few hours after 52 U.N. weapons inspectors arrived in Baghdad to resume the dismantling of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction under terms of the Gulf War cease-fire.

Saddam banned U.N. planes from flying to Baghdad earlier this month. In declaring the cease-fire in the "no fly" zones in northern and southern Iraq, the government also bowed to U.N. demands that the inspectors use their own aircraft.

At U.N. headquarters, the head of the inspection operation, Rolf Ekeus, said he would keep flying inspectors into Iraq despite the latest clash. He said the resumption of U.N. flights went smoothly and he saw no problems.

The inspectors who arrived Thursday said they anticipated no interference.

"We were well received by the Iraqis, and we anticipate it will continue in the future," said Paul Brough, an American who heads a 25-member team that is destroying chemical weapons.

The treatment of the inspectors will be watched closely as a test of Iraq's attitude and willingness to cooperate, not only with the United Nations but with Clinton.

The state-run Iraqi press expressed hope that relations with the United States would improve now that Clinton has replaced George Bush.

"The basis is there to open a new page in Iraqi-American relations and to prepare for the Clinton administration to study the lifting of the illegal air embargo," said the army newspaper Al-Qadisiya.

Iraq considers the air exclusion zones imposed by the United States and its allies to be a violation of its sovereignty.

The northern zone was declared in April 1991 to protect Kurdish rebels from Iraqi attacks and the southern zone was imposed last August to protect rebellious Shiite Muslims.

There have been a series of allied bombing sorties and missile attacks on Iraqi sites in the zones since Jan. 13, but the one Thursday was the first since Clinton took office Wednesday.

In Ankara, the Turkish Foreign Ministry said in a statement it hoped challenges to the allies like that on Thursday would "remain a sporadic incident." The jets protecting the northern "no-fly" zone operate out of the Incirlik air base in Turkey.

France distanced itself from the missile attack on Sunday, saying it went beyond the coalition's mandate and should have been approved by the U.N. Security Council. The French Defense Ministry said it was reviewing Thursday's attack.

NEWS BRIEFS

Acid rain problem drops slowly Underhill, Vt.

For the past 12 years, a series of buckets, some attached to sophisticated scientific equipment, others just lashed to posts, have sat on a hillside collecting samples for acid rain research.

Every day that it rains or snows, researchers at the University of Vermont's Proctor Maple Research Center have tested the water's acidity.

To some, the results are surprising.

"My feeling right now is (the acid level) is staying the same," said Sumner Williams, the center's assistant director.

The constant acidity level belies warnings made a decade ago about how increasing levels of acid in rain and snow would kill the lakes and forests in the Northeast.

On five lakes in Maine, scientists have recorded a decrease in the level of some chemicals associated with acid rain. In New York state, the amount of acid rain-causing chemicals in precipitation also has decreased.

Scientists credit a series of federal clean air regulations for the reduction in the amount of sulfur belched into the air.

Acid rain is precipitation that has been acidified by chemicals, mainly sulfur, that have been pumped into the air. It can cause the deterioration of buildings' exteriors; it can harm human health.

The biggest source of airborne sulfur is coal-burning power plants in the Midwest.

Bill could preserve desert landsWashington, D.C.

Legislation aimed at protecting large portions of the vast California desert wilderness, and to create three new national parks in the process, was introduced Thursday by California Sen. Dianne Feinstein.

The bill, among other things, would establish a trio of new national parks — Death Valley, Joshua Tree and Mojave — and give federal officials control over use of 7 million acres of the desert.

It was the first bill introduced by Feinstein, a Democrat elected to the Senate last November.

"This landmark bill strikes a balance between protecting the environment, protecting the region's jobs and recognizing the need to maintain military uses of some portions of the desert," she said.

The bill would designate nearly 4 million acres of wilderness to be under the control of the Interior Department's Bureau of Land Management. It also would add 1.3 million acres of national park "quality land" to Death Valley National Monument and 234,000 acres to Joshua Tree National Monument. Both would be redesigned as national parks, and the bill would designate 1.5 million acres as the Mojave National Park.

Feinstein's statement noted that "the California desert is incredibly diverse, comprised of sand dunes, extinct volcanoes, 90 mountain ranges, the world's largest Joshua tree forest and more than 100,000 archaeological sites."

during class when the .357 Magnum fired, said police Detective Dennis Coyne. The bullet passed through one student and struck and killed a 16-year-old boy.

The armed youth apologized to about 30 classmates and waited for police, teacher Charles Schwartz said. "I am sorry. I didn't mean to do it," students quoted the gunman as saying.

While the teacher speculated poor grades may have led to the gunfire, detectives said the shooting was apparently unintentional.

The gunman, whose identity wasn't disclosed, was arrested minutes later and the weapon was confiscated, said Officer Bob Cox. Students said the gunman was showing off the weapon in class before the shooting.

Alaska approves abortion rulesJuneau, Alaska

Lt. Gov. Jack Coghill signed regulations Wednesday that will strictly limit state funding of abortions for poor women.

The regulations take effect in 30 days, but officials with the Alaska Civil Liberties Union and Planned Parenthood said they planned to challenge the restrictions before then.

The rules, proposed last year by Gov. Walter J. Hickel, would end state funding of most elective abortions paid through the Medicaid program.

The new rules would allow abortions that a doctor declared medically necessary to save a woman's life or to maintain her physical or mental health.

The state also would pay for abortions requested when a pregnancy resulted from rape or incest.

Attorney General Charlie Cole approved the regulations, saying he believed they would pass constitutional muster.

Cole said the U.S. Supreme Court has held repeatedly that states are not required to spend public money for abortions.

A challenge is likely on state constitutional grounds. The Alaska Constitution has a strong privacy provision that the U.S. Constitution lacks.

But Cole said he believed the Alaska Supreme Court would rule that the state right to privacy does not require state funding of elective abortions.

College students still reluctant to discuss AIDS

By Linda Aha
Staff Writer

Despite the extensive information that is available about AIDS, college students still fail to talk about the disease with prospective partners, according to a recent UCLA study.

"I don't have any indication that (education) helps people talk about it," said Marsha Bollinger, coordinator for the San Luis Obispo County AIDS Program.

Sophie Farsad, a coordinator for the Cal Poly's Health Center Sexuality Team, agreed. "Kids need to change their behavior," she said.

The UCLA study also found that of the 370 heterosexual students polled, almost two-thirds said they don't use condoms.

"The first step is communicating with your partner," said Susan Ford, a health educator at the Health Center. "The second is to take primary steps. You're really making a choice about personal safety."

Despite the results of the UCLA study, health educators said more students are asking about the risk of AIDS.

"I see couples coming in together, so they're talking about it," Bollinger said.

Neil S. Wenger, chief author of the UCLA study, suggested that when doctors teach patients about AIDS, antibody tests for HIV, the virus that causes the disease, should also be offered.

By including the test, Wenger found that discussions between students and their sexual partners are almost twice as likely to occur.

Farsad said she thinks many students don't discuss AIDS because they are afraid to find out if they are infected.

"Some just would rather not know," she said. "If you hear 'HIV test,' it makes you think you could have it."

The UCLA study divided students into three groups.

One-third of the subjects were informed about the dangers of contracting AIDS through unprotected sex.

Another third were given an AIDS antibody test in addition to information about the disease, and the last third were left alone.

The students were questioned both at the start of the study and again six months later. Questions were put to them to determine to whether or not they had asked their sexual partners if they were infected with the AIDS virus.

The study found that students who received the HIV test were considerably more likely to have asked their partners about their AIDS status than those students who had only been given information about the disease.

Researchers from the study, however, warned that infected lovers might lie, and that "the unaware might be lulled into unprotected sexual behaviors by unscrupulous partners."

Bollinger was not surprised about the study's findings regarding low condom use among students.

She related using condoms to the act of smoking, adding that although people know that smoking is bad for them, she said, they still do it.

"But with smoking, you only have to worry about you and the cigarette," Bollinger said. "With AIDS, it's between you and others. It's much more complex."

LAWSUIT

The suit alleges that the couple's last fight left Hansen with emotional and physical injuries that may never heal.

In the lawsuit, Hansen alleges that Cal Poly is liable for her injuries because both women were in the care of the staff, coaches, trainers, faculty and administrators of the university when she was shot.

The suit contends that Cal Poly personnel should have known about the dangers posed to Hansen since Kaaii had threatened her before and had attempted suicide on a number of occasions.

The suit, however, is not a cause for concern for Cal Poly, according to California Deputy Attorney General Laura Gold. "(Hansen's attorneys) have bungled this case from the very beginning," she said from her Los Angeles office.

"To begin with, there are a lot of technical errors in the way it has been filed," she said. "They initially filed it in Long Beach, because the (CSU) Chancellor's Office is there. But suits of this nature have to be filed where the tort was committed."

Gold also said she believes the factual allegations are false.

"They can allege whatever they want, but it doesn't make it true," she said. "It's garbage."

John Urquhart, a Rancho Santa Fe attorney representing Hansen, did not return repeated telephone calls.

One of the main allegations made in the suit by Hansen and her attorneys is that Kaaii and Hansen were under the care of Cal Poly psychology professor Bette Tryon.

The suit alleges Tryon "held herself out and represented to ... Kaaii and ... Hansen that she was a competent psychologist licensed by the State of California to practice psychology (and to) test, analyze, evaluate and treat patients and clients suffering from psychological and emotional disorders."

Professional psychologists have a legal responsibility to inform potential victims of danger. But Tryon did not have that same responsibility, Gold said.

"She's not a psychologist and she never claimed to be," she said. "The law does not impose on her the same duties as imposed on a psychologist. She was never presented to them as being a psychologist."

Tryon was merely being the women's friend, Gold said.

"It's like having two acquaintances who are having a problem," she said. "From a friendly point of view, she tried to help them deal with the problem ... It's sad that she's ended up being the defendant targeted in a lawsuit."

Gold said Cal Poly and Tryon were a licensed psychologist because Hansen knew of prior threats made by Kaaii.

"The complaint suggests that Cal Poly and Tryon had a duty to warn," she said. "What warning was needed? She already knew of the threats."

"The duty is to warn a potential victim who is in total ignorance of the threat. The threats were made in (Hansen's) presence," she said.

Kaaii believes the suit is intended to harass her, according to her attorney, Richard McQueary. He thinks the lawsuit will be ineffective.

"It's my feeling that they're just trying to extort money out of Cal Poly," he said. "I think it's a frivolous lawsuit. The criminal trial reached the right conclusion."

"This is just a shoddy attempt to extort money out of Cal Poly because the other defendants don't have anything," he said. "Since (the other defendants) are college kids, they just don't have anything. You can't get what isn't there."

McQueary said if the case makes it to court, it should do so within a year.

REPORTER'S NOTEBOOK

Chewing over The Rules

By Matthew Hoy

The Stalls: a horror to all dorm residents.

Eating there is like an Indiana Jones adventure. Will he be able to escape the evil Greek Beef? Will the Hunter Steak get him before he gets it?

My relationship with the Stalls is a love/hate relationship. I hate to eat there, and I'd love to get the hell out.

It's not that the food there is really bad, its downright inedible. The theme for the stalls should be: "The Stalls: The next best thing to hemlock."

I feel as though I've been cheated by the Stalls. I decided to eat dinner there one night and the little sign with all the Day-glo colors said "Hunter Steak."

Steak!
Yes! Happy! Happy! Joy! Joy!
Wrong! Try a ground-beef (cow) pattie with some strange (spew) sauce.

I've always wondered if putting a constructive comment like "This food sucks," in the comment box would really provoke a response.

I just don't understand why the stalls management can be so sickeningly nice to people who make comments like that. Their typical response to this type of comment is something like, "We're sorry you feel that way. Blah, Blah, Blah." My response would be: "Stuff it, sucker."

But I can understand the people who enter comments like those. I, once, in my more foolish youthful years, submitted a serious, constructive criticism.

It was honest, direct and worded very succinctly: "Why don't you get bottles for the mustard and ketchup instead of those tubs in the salad bar. I don't like having carrot strands, cucumber slices and other mish-mash in my mustard."

Their response: "We can't have everything."

What?

That is the most inane response I've ever heard in my life! Why not? I pay $686 a quarter and you can't spend $2 on a bottle so I don't have vegetable droppings in my mustard.

So you can realize my dismay

My relationship with the Stalls is a love/hate relationship. I hate to eat there, and I'd love to get the hell out.

when I was lectured last quarter on "The Rules" at the stalls.

I had committed the mortal sin of taking some garlic bread (great for that after dinner date) from the pasta line and then eating it while waiting for my dead slab of cow to cook.

I did not realize my horrendous error until the flax-haired czar of the stalls pointed it out.

"What do you think you're doing?"

"Eating," I say. (Heavily laden with obnoxious temperament.)

"You're not allowed to have that unless you eat the food from the pasta line."

"I'm sorry, I didn't know that. Do you want it back?"

"No. You should know the rules by now."

"THE RULES?"

"You're not allowed to jump lines. It's out there on the flyers on the tables."

"Well, I'm sorry I haven't eaten here yet this week. I have not had the opportunity to read the flyer."

"Just don't do it again."

With that our conversation ended. And then I realized it. Who does she think she is?

If this were any other restaurant I would not have been approached and spoken to with that tone. I would not be defending myself from an accusation, I would merely be informed of a salient fact and then kindly left to attempt to enjoy my meal.

But I got my heinie chewed out. HELP! I don't understand!

And another thing. What are THE RULES?

I've never seen a copy of THE RULES. I've never been told all THE RULES. I have been able, through incidents such as these, to glean a few of THE RULES.

But I still feel incomplete. I am in ignorance of all of THE RULES. Someone please help me.

After hours of digestion and quiet contemplation I understand. It was all in the housing agreement I signed. In that one moment of vegetation while signing that document, I gave away all rights to my digestive tract.

I have to eat here! I have no rights, they already have my money. I cannot withhold payment.

So now I enter those horrid halls, eating that stuff (food) with quiet desperation, and hoping that, someday, my father will let me move off-campus.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Female, not just 'feminist'

I appreciated your article about me in the entertainment section Thursday, January 21.

I did want to clarify a misquote in the article. I described my music to my interviewer as comedic, socially conscious and pissed-off female. Yet in the article I was quoted as saying "pissed-off feminist." There is a big difference.

My songs are diary pieces of my life. I sing about being happy, in love, disillusioned and angry or whatever I may be feeling at the time I write. I am not a "pissed-off feminist." But I am not afraid to claim the title feminist, it does not mean that I am an angry person. It means that I am a woman exploring what it means to be a woman in this society and fighting for what I believe.

In (the Jan. 20 Mustang Daily), Stanley Langland complained about the "cosmetic" cabinet appointments based on gender and color.

Obviously, the folks who designed and/or constructed our new (pastel monstrosity) Recreation Center have perfected color blindness. Therefore, I suggest that they be given the responsibility for choosing our next cabinet.

Middle East rebuttal

In writing this letter, I am expressing deep concern over a letter to the editor titled, "Jordan, Egypt have no valid claim" (Mustang Daily, Jan. 20). In this letter, Robert C. Ewing shows a great lack of knowledge concerning Middle East conflict. I assume that when he wrote the letter he was hoping there were no readers with an extensive knowledge of the situation in Palestine.

In his letter, he states that Jordan and Egypt invaded the West Bank and Gaza Strip illegally because it belonged to Israel. His first mistake is that he doesn't realize that, prior to 1947, the country of Palestine had existed for the previous 1,300 years.

Another thing the writer fails to mention is U.N. Security Council Resolution 181, which in 1947 partitioned Palestine into an Israeli State and a Palestine State. The new state of Israel immediately invaded the Palestinian land and attacked its Arab neighbors. In the best interests of the Palestinians, Egypt and Jordan maintained control over the West Bank and Gaza Strip, land intended for the State of Palestine.

The writer then states that Israel "liberated" the Gaza Strip and the West Bank in 1967, as they were territories belonging to Israel. I ask him, why would two territories, both with purely Arab populations, feel "liberated" when Israel took over? As an excuse for Israel's attack on its Arab neighbors, the writer uses Resolution 242, claiming it allowed Israel to attack its neighbors in order to acquire the two territories. I do not know if the writer was at all aware that this resolution was ratified by the U.N. Security Council on Nov. 22, 1967, after Israel had invaded the Arab territories. If he read the entire resolution, he would have realized that it was written against Israel, and in the first subclause of the first operative clause, the Security Council demands the "...withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from the territories occupied in the recent conflict..."

I also ask the writer to recall the 1983 Geneva Convention, which once again ordered the withdrawal of Israeli troops from those territories. I was most disturbed by the slanderous remarks claiming Arabs and Palestinians were "schemers." I have read Security Council Resolution 242 and have done extensive research on the Palestinian Conflict. I can tell Robert that, by International Law, Israel has no claim to those tow territories. Furthermore, I would like Robert to do a little research on the topic so we don't have to read any more of his unsupported facts.

"Now that the program has been canceled, I think it's important to have some sort of leadership programs," he added. "For the leadership skills (the ropes course) could provide, it really doesn't cost a lot of money."

"It is a good token to the students that the ASI wants to offer something they can take away with them."

Several of the directors showed an interest in the ropes course.

"I'm a part of the Associated College Unions Executive Committee and I'm always being told about how well organized our leadership is," said Erica Brown, a director from the College of Professional Studies. "A lot of the success we have is due to the bonding we do in the beginning of the year."

ASI's current liability insurance would cover the ropes course, according to Shawn Reeves, ASI vice president of finance.

If approved, the ropes course would be available to all campus organizations, possibly for a fee.

The ropes course resolution will be brought before the board and discussed again at the next regular board meeting Jan. 27.

— "a 2,000-pound gorilla staring him in the face," — is one of the most obvious problems.

Culver said Clinton's economic package to Congress may include a 10- to 15-cent gasoline tax.

Culver and McKibbin respectively said Clinton would almost immediately allow homosexuals into the military and also would remove Bush's gag order for distributing abortion information at federally-funded clinics.

Culver also said Clinton would, by executive order, allow fetal tissue to be used in medical research.

On the issue of foreign policy, McKibbin, Culver and Fetzer agree that there will not be a big change.

Clinton will not be as quick to use military force, Culver said, but his focus will be more on changing domestic policy.

"I expect continuity," McKibbin said. "I think he will follow Bush's positions."

The three professors also agreed Clinton's personality would bring a change to the presidency.

"His enthusiasm and energy are a good mix," Fetzer said. "He enjoys being president."

McKibbin said Clinton is "a very likable guy — kind of a Ronald Reagan with brains."

"Oh, that wasn't nice," he added. "It just slipped out."

"While Bush liked to talk to kings and queens, Clinton likes to hang out with people at McDonald's."

Take me out to the ballgame

• Did anyone else think that Bill Clinton was going to throw Al Gore a fastball after the National Anthem was sung at the Inauguration ceremonies?

• With Shawn Kirkeby's collegiate career finished, Cal Poly's men's basketball team is now accepting applications from anyone who can touch the ceiling.

• Now that football season is over for every California football team, we can concentrate on more important things: 42 days 'till spring training.

• Another football season has come and gone, reminding me that I miss Howard Cosell.

• Who would win a race between Musty the Mustang, a Chia Pet and a UC Santa Cruz Banana Slug?

• Score one for women's rights: On the wallet-size schedule for the men's and women's basketball team, the women's games are listed on the front and the men's are on the back.

• Did you hear Faith No More will be performing at the postgame show following Saturday's women's basketball game. Of course, the music will start blaring 24 1/2 hours after the Mustangs tipoff.

• February 6. Mark that date on your calendars Mustang fans. At home are the women's tennis (2 p.m.), wrestling (3 p.m.), women's basketball (5:45 p.m.) and men's basketball (8:05 p.m.) teams.

• At halftime of that Feb. 6 men's basketball game will be the first-ever Mustang Media Game, in which the local media will take on the Cal Poly athletic staff and coaches.

• Men's soccer coach Wolfgang Gartner, women's soccer coach Alex Crozier and volleyball coach Craig Cummings are expected to compete on the staff team coached by Associate Athletic Director Marilyn McNeil.

• The media team will include members of KSBY (Ch. 6), KCOY (Ch. 12), KKAL, KVEC, the Telegram-Tribune and your very own Mustang Daily.

Mustangs hope for road wins

Coming off a respectable weekend, the Cal Poly men's basketball team could jump back in the thick of the conference race with wins tonight and tomorrow.

The Mustangs (1-3 in California Collegiate Athletic Association, 7-9 overall) take the road to face Cal Poly Pomona (1-3, 8-8) tonight at 7:30 p.m.

Cal Poly will face a tougher test Saturday night versus Cal State Los Angeles (3-1, 11-3).

The Mustangs' starting point guard, Jeff Oliver, will make the trip and likely see playing time. Oliver, who missed the last two games with a calf injury, is averaging 16 points, 3.4 assists and 1.7 steals per outing.

Oliver's replacement last week, Kyle Ellis, filled in admirably, scoring 17 versus Chapman on Friday and a career-high 18 on Saturday against Cal State Dominguez Hills.

The Golden Eagles have the CCAA's leading scorer in Tony McGee, whose averaging 20.7 points.

Lacrosse

The Cal Poly men's lacrosse club has practiced seven days a week through the recent storms and is ready to strap on the pads for its season opener against St. Mary's on Jan. 30.

No home site has been determined as of Thursday.

The Mustangs expect to excel once again in the Western Collegiate Lacrosse League, having lost only one starter to eligibility.

Last season, the Mustangs fell to Chapman in the Division II State Championship.

The Mustangs checked and cradled into the championship game after topping the northern division with a 4-0 record and defeating the University of the Pacific and UC Santa Cruz in postseason games.

The Mustangs were 5-6 overall last year. Three of the losses came against Division I foes, UCLA, Stanford and Sonoma State.

Ski team

New Year's weekend was the beginning of the 1993 race season for Cal Poly's very own alpine ski team.

The dual giant-slam race on Jan. 3 was Cal Poly's opportunity to pick up where it left off last year. Cal Poly earned a first place victory to start the season off with a bang.

Skiers Todd Miller, Scott

Waite and Tim Rego led the effort with first, eighth and 10th place finishes, respectively.

Regan Williams skied to a sixth place finish for the women's team, which did not place as a team because Williams was the lone Mustang to earn points.

The ski league is comprised of 12 southern California collegiate teams, including UCLA, UCSB, Southern Cal and Cal Poly Pomona.

The Cal Poly ski team encourages new members at any time during the year and anyone interested should contact the team through the Rec Sports office.
