Cal Poly Construction Management Students Win Top Honors at Regional Competition

SAN LUIS OBISPO — Cal Poly construction management students earned top honors at the Associated Schools of Construction competition held in February in Reno, Nev. Seven out of 12 Cal Poly teams placed in the top three spots in their respective categories. Overall, Cal Poly took home more trophies than any other university.

Cal Poly students took first in the Mechanical category; second in the Mixed Use, Design Build and Marine Construction categories; and third in the Heavy Civil, Concrete, and Risk Management divisions.

A total of 178 teams from 43 universities competed in this year's competition. Cal Poly has competed in this event for 28 years. This year a record 30 percent of Cal Poly's construction management students participated in the competition.

"The ASC competitions are invaluable to students' career development. There's nothing in the country that compares with it," said Al Hauck, head of the Construction Management Department. "The Reno competition attracts up to 1,400 students, who further their education, gain professional development and benefit from networking."
