Soldier released by Somali captors

Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia — U.S. helicopter pilot Michael Durant, battered but buoyant, returned to freedom Thursday on a stretcher after 11 days as a captive of a Somalia warlord.

The United States said no deal was made for the release of Durant, captured in an Oct. 3 battle between U.N. troops and Mohamed Farrah Aidid's fighters, and of a Nigerian private captured in a Sept. 5 gunfight.

However, Aidid emerged with an enhanced stature as a result of the release, which he came out of hiding to announce at a news conference. He appeared confident and dressed in a crisply pressed blue-striped shirt and red tie.

The freeing of Durant spurred more calls from Congress for speeding up the departure of U.S. troops from Somalia, and President Clinton indicated he might be flexible on his March 31 deadline for withdrawal.

Durant, 32, clenched his teeth and his eyes teared as he was carried out on a stretcher from a walled compound and handed over to Red Cross representatives. He clutched a note from his wife and parents that the Red Cross gave him just before his release. He declined to speak to reporters.

Dr. John Holcomb of the 46th U.S. Army Field Hospital, who examined Durant, said the pilot suffered a broken leg, broken cheekbone and a fractured back,

Three-year degree push gaining steam

Poly is pursuing its own modifications

By Brooke Richardson

A program that would allow college students to graduate with bachelor's degrees in just three years is gaining favor among state lawmakers.

Gov. Pete Wilson was among those to endorse the idea of a three-year accelerated college program on Wednesday.

His announcement came at a joint meeting of the California State University Board of Trustees, the University of California Board of Regents and state lawmakers.

But such a plan may not be feasible for Cal Poly or many other CSU campuses anytime soon, according to university officials.

"It's an idea that's being talked about right now (for CSU schools)," said chancellor's office spokesperson Colleen Bentley-Adler.

"Really, it's a matter of saving money at this point," she said. "(It is) certainly less expensive for students. (They would) get out into their jobs faster and it would create more space for more students (in the CSU system)."

Bentley-Adler said one idea for the program is to make college more of a year-round activity for students on the three-year fast-track.

"To do it," she said, "we might have to offer more classes during the summer."

Also, she said, the CSU system would have to make better use of grades K-12.

"At this point, it's more talk than any firm proposals. It's a little unrealistic at this point with the budget cuts."

5 die in shooting at SoCal fitness club

Associated Press

EL CAJON — A man walked up to a fitness center at noontime Thursday, shot one person to death, then entered the building and fatally shot three more people before killing himself, police said.

In addition to the five dead, at least one other person sustained minor injuries, said police Lt. Bill McClurg.

The gunman's victims were three women and one man, McClurg said.

At least one of the dead worked at the large health club, said instructor Rise Kerjci.

Witnesses said the young man drove up to the Family Fitness Center in the suburb, about 10 miles east of San Diego, and shot one person who had just left the building.

He then walked into the health club, fired several more times, walked out and shot himself in his car, McClurg said.

Krejci, who was sitting in an office near the lobby, estimated a few hundred people were inside when the gunman entered, including five to 10 children in a babysitting area.

No children were injured, she said.

Four people, including the gunman, died at the scene. The fifth, a man, died shortly afterward at an area hospital, McClurg said.

One woman with minor injuries was in stable condition at Grossmont Hospital, McClurg said.

Jerry Reynolds, who was in a weight room on the club's upper floor, said he heard shots below that sounded "like firecrackers."

When he ran downstairs, people were screaming to get out of the building and to call police, he said. He did not see the gunman, he said.

Bill McIntosh, also in the weight room, said people started running from the room when they heard the shots.

Police were trying to comfort and question about 50 people still inside the health club, McClurg said.

Clock ticking on alumni credits at Poly Rec Center

By Jennifer Morehouse
Daily Staff Writer

Students who started taking advantage of their alumni credits at the Cal Poly Rec Center this summer have watched those credits continue to disappear throughout the fall.

A little-known policy mandates alumni credits — given to compensate students for fees paid before the center was built — to run consecutively from the time the first quarter is requested.

Students currently enrolled can use the credits they have already amassed during quarters they are not attending.

Rec Sports Director Rick Johnson said the credits run continuously because Rec Sports wants all alumni credits to be used by 1999.

"If the credits aren't used continuously, we would have a database nightmare that would continue into the next century," Johnson said.

There are more than 45,000 alumni files in the database — an impossible number to start and stop alumni.

GRADUATION: Push is intensifying to provide a three-year option for students

"Students would have to take more Advanced Placement classes in high school," she said. "There would have to be more ties with K-12."

Despite talk of such a program, Cal Poly students shouldn't look to see a three-year program here anytime soon, said Howard West, President Warren Baker's administrative assistant.

However, the university is working on its own program of loosening curriculum to get students through the college more quickly.

"To reduce the formal education process (by implementing a three year plan)... in technical disciplines... does not appear to be a reasonable thing to do," West said.

Even Bentley-Adler said not to expect to see a three-year program at other CSU schools, at least for a while.

"At this point, it's more talk than any firm proposals," she said. "It's a little unrealistic at this point with budget cuts."

Student reaction to the proposed fast-paced program seems mixed.

Computer science freshman J.T. Gilkeson said he thinks a three year program sounds like a good idea.

"A lot of people I see are fifth or sixth year seniors," he said. "It sounds good... being able to get in and out of college."

Liberal studies junior Linda Machado is not quite as positive on the idea. She said three years is not enough time to learn everything that is needed for most majors.

"I think it would cram too much into too little time and push (students) out too quickly," she said.

However, food science senior Toby Daly said he thinks students could come out with as much knowledge from school in three years as five.

"Cramming it in in three years or five years probably wouldn't matter," he said.

REC CENTER: Alumni credits continuously evaporate, but no official complaints

ni credits whenever desired, he said.

Still, several students said they feel cheated by the policy.

"It doesn't seem fair that people don't get to choose when they use their credits," said ornamental horticulture sophomore Mike Tran.

Tran said since students have been paying for the center to be built, they should get their money's worth.

Human development senior Jenn Hooper said she also felt Rec Sports should be more flexible.

"I think students who are here for the summer but aren't enrolled should be able to use their credits," she said. "I don't plan on staying in San Luis (Obispo) after I graduate, but I feel I am being cheated if I don't get to use all my credits."

Johnson said Rec Center employees are trained to let students and alumni know what options are available when using the center. He said he advises students who plan to stay in the area after graduation not to start using their alumni credits while they are still enrolled.

The Rec Center has a suggestion box for students, and Johnson said he has never heard a complaint about the alumni credit policy. The policy was implemented last spring.

"If students want to change the policy, they have the right," he said.

He said students who would like the policy altered should bring it to the attention of ASI.

but appeared to have been treated fairly well by his captors. The leg was in a splint, but had not been set and was quite painful, Holcomb said.

"Mike is fine, basically," Holcomb said, adding that Durant "cried a little bit — tears of joy."

He said most of Durant's injuries probably were sustained when a rocket-propelled grenade blasted the tail off his helicopter, although Durant said in an interview while he was in captivity that he had been badly beaten by a crowd and stripped naked after his capture.

Officials said Durant would be flown Friday to a U.S. military base in Ramstein, Germany, and then taken to a military hospital in Landstuhl, where his wife, Lorrie, would join him.

Aidid, who has eluded capture since June despite a U.N. ransom of $25,000, looked more like a political candidate than a wanted guerrilla during his appearance Thursday.

The news conference itself was a sign of how things have changed in the Somali capital. No longer a fugitive, Aidid emerged with an enhanced image and could even become a political player.

Appearing relaxed, Aidid called for the unconditional release of 32 Somalis detained by the United Nations, including three top aides and his chief arms supplier. Aidid earlier made their release a condition for releasing Durant.

Clinton said it was "up to the U.N." whether Aidid's lieutenants would be released. "We made no deals to secure the release of Chief Warrant Officer Durant," Clinton said at a news conference in Washington.

U.N. leaves Haiti; within hours, Aristide aide killed

Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — A U.N. police team pulled out of Haiti on Thursday, weakening the prospects for ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide's return by Oct. 30 under a U.N. plan.

Within hours, gunmen assassinated the pro-Aristide justice minister.

The assassination of Guy Malary was the latest in a series of killing and other violence aimed at sabotaging the U.N. plan to return Aristide to power.

Malary was part of the transitional government installed on Sept. 2 to pave the way for Aristide's return.

Radio Metropoli reported Malary was leaving the Justice Ministry building in his car when gunmen in another car shot him. A driver and two security guards also were killed in a hail of bullets, Metropoli director Richard Widmeier said.

Like many Cabinet members in the transition government, Malary had received death threats since joining the administration, said Ira Kurzban, a friend and lawyer in Miami who specializes in Haitian issues. He said Malary handled court work for the U.S. Embassy in Haiti.

Malary was not previously associated with Aristide, and Kurzban said he believed the killing "shows that no one is safe."

Malary, a corporate lawyer in his 30's, attended Georgetown and Howard universities in Washington.

The assassination occurred shortly after noon. In the morning, 51 Canadian Mounties flew home in a clear sign that a U.N.-brokered plan to restore democracy was foundering.

The withdrawal represented the premature end of a U.N. plan to retrain Haiti's repressive police. It followed the retreat on Tuesday of a U.S. warship carrying military medics, engineers and civil affairs specialists in advance of the return of Aristide, who was ousted in a September 1991 military coup.

The Canadians were in Haiti as the advance unit to lay the groundwork for the U.N. peace plan that calls for Aristide's return. Aristide and army commander Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, who participated in the coup, signed the accord in July.

The United Nations is continuing to stand by its Oct. 30 date for Aristide's return. But it was increasingly apparent Thursday that violence fomented by his opponents would prevent the deadline from being met.

The plan ran into trouble on Monday when military-backed port authorities refused to allow the USS Harlan County to dock. Anti-U.N. demonstrations orchestrated by the military prompted Washington to withdraw the warship Tuesday and push for renewed sanctions to pressure Haiti's military to yield power to Aristide.

The U.N. Security Council voted Wednesday to reimpose an oil and arms embargo and freeze the assets of Haiti's military leaders on Oct. 18 if they do not keep their promise to return Aristide.

The switch in tactics — from noncombatant soldiers to reimposing sanctions — has left the transition government in Haiti without meaningful support in a country where weapons, not votes, have often determined power.

Despite the setbacks, President Clinton announced on Thursday in a nationally televised broadcast that his determination to help bring democracy to Haiti was "as strong as ever."

He expressed strong support for Haiti's prime minister, Robert Malval, who was chosen by Aristide. Clinton said Malval was a key link in the plan to restore democracy to Haiti.

"The United States is very concerned about his safety and his ability to function," Clinton said. "It would be a grave error to underestimate the extent to which this country considers him a part of the solution."

Malval said in an interview that the U.N. troop pullout "does not mean the end of the mission. They have left and they will return."

Seven noncombatant Canadian soldiers and an advance party of 46 American troops remained in Haiti, the only sign of a U.N. military and economic assistance force that was to have numbered 1,600 by Oct. 30. The Pentagon says the American troops will leave by Monday if no diplomatic breakthrough occurs.

The Mounties were to help train a new civilian police force, but the Haitian Parliament did not comply with the U.N. plan to create one. The idea of retraining Haiti's traditionally repressive police had been ridiculed by Aristide supporters.

The army's police division, headed by coup leader Lt. Col. Joseph Michel Francois, also commands thousands of armed civilians whom the United Nations has blamed for a wave of killings and assassination attempts of Aristide supporters in recent weeks.

Capt. Bernard Dionne, one of the remaining U.N. soldiers, characterized Tuesday's departure of the U.S. ship — carrying 194 American and 25 Canadian noncombatant troops — as a lost opportunity for Haiti to regain economic stability following two devastating years of military domination.

"Within 24 hours of the arrival of the Harlan County, our 25 engineers were ready to begin building nine projects, mostly schools and hospitals," he said. "It was a great plan."

Ancient lit. class enters modern era — students study via modem

By Julie Staszny
Daily Staff Writer

It sounds like a course out of students' dreams: no books to buy, no mandatory time for lectures, no walk to class.

With the help of Cal Poly's computer network, English professor Michael Orth plans to offer these options next quarter in what he terms a revolutionary English 251 course.

The English Department will offer an experimental interactive computer conferencing course in Great Books, Ancient and Classical Period, for credit in winter quarter 1994.

"If I can make it work, we'll sell it to the world," Orth said.

Students will receive lectures, course syllabi, tests and assignments via a directory on Cal Poly's computer network, AIX. Discussions with classmates and consultations with the professor will also occur through the net.

Students can take the class at any time and from any PC or terminal connected to AIX.

Orth said the class is ideal for people with hectic schedules or who are unable to leave their home, such as parents who need to be with their children.

"This is a definite opportunity (these students) wouldn't normally have," Orth said. "It won't interfere with a job or (your) love life."

Students can sign up for the course through CAPTURE, like any other English class, but the teaching method is far from normal.

The only prerequisites for the course are an AIX account and some familiarity with using E-mail, navigating through the net, downloading files and using "talk" and other interactive modes, Orth said.

Orth warned the class isn't for everybody, however.

Students must be able to work independently without physical contact with the professor or classmates, he said.

Orth said both Cal Poly and students will save money from this class. Cal Poly won't have to provide classrooms, parking spaces or other facilities necessary for classes held on campus.

"It's a significant savings," Orth said.

He said he plans to have student texts available on the computer net as well.

"Most people won't have to buy their books," he said.

Orth developed the course himself through information collected from other sources over time.

"No one I know of has done this before," he said. "I think with skill and luck Cal Poly, can lead in this."

According to Orth, some faculty members are uneasy with the course. He said they believe students benefit from personal interaction among professor and classmates.

"I don't think students need to look at my face every period," Orth said. "The students are going to teach me how to run this course or it's not going to work."

Some students said they like the idea of the course.

"I would take it," said industrial engineering senior Henry Rabanall. "People who are computer-literate would probably like the screen better than a teacher."

"I was planning to take Great Books next quarter," said business sophomore Erin Marshall. "This is an option I'll have to look into."

Other students are more skeptical.

"I think you'll get a better understanding of the class with the teacher (present)," said business senior Josh Awuma.

If the course does well next quarter, students may begin to see others offered on the net.

Orth said he hopes in the future students will be able to work at their own pace — some finishing the course in three weeks and others in three months.

"I'd like to get it so we're not bound by the calendar anymore than we're bound by the clock or the classroom," Orth said.

Don't forget the real
college expenses

Being a full-time student, I have more stress to deal with than Joey Buttafuoco has jailbait girlfriends.

At the top of my list of things to grant me an early death is money. Yes, greenbacks, bank, dinero, moola, cash, funds. I have to admit that my problem does not stem from the money itself, but from the lack thereof.

The theory is: I don't need money for much of anything because rent has been taken care of — dorms, let's not forget that I'm a freshman — and meals are covered by the good old meal plan. Right?

Wrong.

What about the things in life that matter, like eating at TA's and going dancing? What about mochas, frozen yogurt, and gas for going all those places when I should be studying.

I never understood how much money it costs to simply exist in this world until I left the safe haven of home to enter the realm of being a college student. The parents sported me all the free stuff when I lived at home. You know, the necessities: Cotton balls,

At home, I used to get that thing called allowance: Money my parents gave me to be their kid.

shampoo, soap, toothpaste, socks, underwear, toenail clippers. I sure am homesick.

At home, I used to get that thing called an allowance: Money my parents gave me to be their kid. Every other Friday, all the kids in my family would be extra nice to the parents because we knew that dad got paid. If we kept our parents in good spirits, our payroll would be issued, too. Yep, all the dishwashing, bathroom cleaning, and garbage emptying would pay off.

As I fall into the depths of nostalgia, I have the biggest urge to call home. But that'll cost me as much as I got for allowance.

Maybe money problems would be solved if big Bill Clinton decided to regress back to the days of the barter system. Then we could cruise downtown to Woodstock's and trade our empty water bottles for a large combination pizza. Or maybe trade our little brothers for a college education.

Neither Mr. Buttafuoco nor his girlfriends can fix my money dilemma. Maybe I should make that call back home and ask for my allowance to be reinstated before Taco Bell starts looking expensive.

Parking rules tough on nighttime parkers

I have a few comments about the new parking regulations.

My biggest grief is that it has made it impossible for me to be able to study on campus during the evenings.

I can handle walking to school during the day, but being able to meet study groups at the library at night is a hassle when I have to walk.

It is much more convenient to be able to drive on campus during the evenings, especially if I have to stay late and cannot catch a bus.

REPORTER'S NOTEBOOK

Finding God in a hockey puck

By Jeffrey Jen

There is an old saying that the Lord works in mysterious ways.

That's the case for me.

How the Lord finally got me to put my faith and trust in him in the name of Christianity is mind-boggling.

I was playing street hockey when it started to happen.

I'm serious. By playing street hockey, I finally started to accept God as my lord and savior.

Maybe I should tell you exactly what Christianity has meant to me and how it brought me to where I am now.

Not long ago when I heard the word "Christianity," I asked many questions and wondered like many other people.

To many, being a Christian just means believing that there is a God. I was like that once. Now, it's that and quite a bit more.

Now, being a Christian means trying to pursue a closer relationship (or understanding) with God. One should get to know God and the Lord Jesus Christ better and be more like him. Showing your faith toward him is what's important.

Once, I wasn't like that. But I try to show my faith now.

Humbly speaking, I don't come close to acting like Jesus. Then again, in the modern world, where morals and values have disappeared from the common vocabulary, few — if any — people do.

But I am better off than before.

People tell me two things they think are "wrong" with being a Christian. They say I'm not tough and I've limited my life because now I can't cut loose and go wild. I say "right" — with heavy sarcasm.

Friends tell me I am the sort of person who can't be kept down. Even when the chips are down, I just continue on my way. I bend, but I don't break.

I've suffered — like everybody — but I accept that. I trust God knows what is right. If he isn't granting me something, it's best for me.

I'm no Jean-Claude Van Damme, I can't even fight a lick. But some people tell me I am a tough person because I never stay down.

Am I being limited? No way — I'm the same person who just cuts loose and acts wild every Friday night.

I abstain from sex and drinking. That's my personal choice.

In the age of transmitted diseases, sex is something I can't see as fun. I've been told it's nice, and I don't doubt that. I would prefer to give myself to someone who I really care about. Sex isn't a toy for fun, it's more like an expression of true love.

Where I came from in the deep South, you drank whether you liked it or not, just to be popular. You had to be drunk to have a good time.

I'm sorry, but bumping into walls, weaving around in circles, and throwing up just doesn't appeal to me. Call me stupid, but I think all that is rather silly.

Actually, I feel more free and less limited now that I am a "full-fledged" Christian. I didn't feel this way a short time ago.

One year ago, I wasn't a "full-fledged" Christian. I had been raised by a family with morals and values. I believed there was a God out there, but I really didn't know exactly what it meant "to be Christian." I was interested in it, but afraid that it would "limit" me, wrecking my social life and turning me into a partyless zombie.

I got depressed easily. It was difficult adjusting to college life. It was difficult moving from slow-paced conservative Georgia to fast-lane California.

Then a few friends talked to me about Jesus and God and what they meant to them. I was surprised and impressed by their thinking. After much coaxing, I began to further explore Christianity and the Bible.

I really started to trust in God. I started to pray to him.

Then, I confronted my last social barrier. This January, I spent an evening with friends in worship of God, then went to play street hockey.

This ole' Southern boy had the time of his life. For the first time, I really acted like myself without worrying about anything. I was having fun. My friends and I were acting like "wild things."

I realized I could be a Christian and be social at the same time. I accepted God and Jesus as Lord, Savior, and a big part of my life.

Bingo! My life changed.

I then began feeling more comfortable with myself. My faith was pulling me through any obstacles I would meet.

I suddenly abounded in friends. I got into the social scene more than ever and I go to parties often. I don't become a zombie except from 3 to 8 a.m.

And I continue to "cut loose" with some help from a few wild Christian friends.

To put it in perspective, it was as if I was limping along as a Volkswagen on the highway of life. Then I turned into a Ferrari, switched into the fast lane, and went screeching off into the distance.

I humbly admit that I still have a long way to go.

The one difference from a year ago is that now I know I'm going in the right direction. Last year, I wasn't even sure I was moving in any direction.

One thing I have learned: if you show your faith, God will show the path for you.

Maybe all this sounds stupid. To me, it isn't. God is more than a cheap shield to hide behind — he's more of a huge, golden umbrella that protects us and loves us. People should understand that.

Forget the worry and the social life. God will take care of that for you — like he did for me — if you show your faith.

I should know, since I went down the same path not too long ago and have since changed for the better.

Poly rodeo stampedes into campus arena

Mustang Daily Staff Report

Wolfman Skull won't be there, but an offspring of Oscar is scheduled to snort, kick, buck and stomp on anything that crosses his path as the 1993 Cal Poly Fall Round-up Rodeo ventures into the campus' Collett Arena.

Wolfman Skull is the only bull to ever help a rider earn 100 points in the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association. The scoring for the event includes the animal's performance; the harder a bull bucks, the more points garnered. Wolfman Skull graced the Cal Poly rodeo arena with his presence last year.

But this year, the bull's owner is saving him for a bigger venue.

Filling Wolfman Skull's hooves will be a grandson of Oscar, Oscar's Velvet. Oscar is legendary in the rodeo world and was admitted into the Rodeo Hall of Fame. Oscar was only ridden for a full eight-second ride once in the 500 times he was challenged.

Rodeo coach Clay Robinson said Oscar's Velvet and the other bulls will provide some tough rides Saturday at 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. and Sunday at 1 p.m.

"It's the same as running in an invitational against Carl Lewis," Robinson said.

He said the Cal Poly rodeo uses professional livestock. Most other collegiate rodeos use semi-professional livestock, he added.

He said the livestock is just one of the reasons why he considers Cal Poly's rodeo to be one of the biggest events in the West Region.

He mentioned the rodeo's prestige, heritage and tradition as other important aspects that draw teams to San Luis Obispo.

He said 11 teams will compete in the nine events, including West Hills College, Fresno State, L.A. Pierce College and Modesto College.

Some of the events include bull riding, steer wrestling, bronc riding and team roping.

Robinson said he has high expectations for Cal Poly's men's and women's rodeo teams.

The two teams are coming off of first and second-place finishes in the last two regional rodeos.

Agricultural engineering senior Ross Gomez anchors the men's team. He is the defending collegiate national champion in steer wrestling.

Agribusiness junior Jennifer Holzapfel has played a role in the success of the women's team. She finished second in the breakaway roping competition and third in goat tying at the last rodeo Oct. 8-10.

"You will be surprised to see how much ability these athletes have," Robinson said.

Tickets for children and students are $4 and $6 for adults. Tickets can be purchased at the ASI Ticket Office or Collett Arena.

FOOTBALL: Second half of season turns tough for Mustangs yard punt return average. His 333 yards on punt returns is second most in the country. Steen is also 14th with a 28.9 yard kick return average.

On the other side of the ball, the defense is allowing only 16 points a game (25th in Div. II). Cal Poly has forced 19 turnovers and given away only six. Their +2.8 turnover margin per game is second best nationally.

Despite the numbers, the Mustang players aren't taking the Thunderbirds lightly.

"With one loss in the conference already, it is a must-win game for us."

John Pettas
Offensive Coordinator

"I think we're even in talent," said senior tight end Jeff Radcliffe. "Our pre-season is over. From now on we are playing good teams. We have no more chances for slacking and making mistakes."

According to Setencich, the key to the game is time control. "Southern Utah runs the option. They are a ball control team. That'll put a lot of pressure on our defense. Our offense needs balance between running and passing the ball."

"We're getting into the schedule where the good teams are. This game will set the tempo for the rest of our games," said assistant coach Mike Church.

Offensive coordinator John Pettas also recognized this weekend's match as a crucial game.

"This game is really important," Pettas said. "With one loss in the conference already, it is a must-win game for us."

Poly football to face big test in weekend's game

By Jeffrey Jon
Daily Staff Writer

It would be difficult to find a football game pitting a 4-1 team against a 1-4 team with as much importance as Saturday's American West Conference game between Cal Poly (4-1) and Southern Utah (1-4).

Cal Poly has outscored opponents 162-40 in their last three games while Southern Utah got their single win by one point and lost the others by a total of eight.

But when the Cal Poly Mustangs visit Southern Utah in Cedar City it will be a big game, according to coach Lyle Setencich.

"The records have no bearing," Setencich said. "Their overall record (1-4) makes no difference. They have played a tough schedule."

Southern Utah has lost to Division II 1st-ranked Northern Arizona 27-31, 8th-ranked Angelo State 16-18, Central Oklahoma 20-21 and Montana State 31-32. The Thunderbirds beat AWC foe UC-Davis 28-27.

Cal Poly also met the UC-Davis Aggies. The Mustangs lost the season opener 37-26.

Despite the two teams' overall records, the current standings for the AWC read: Southern Utah 1-0, UC-Davis 1-1, Cal State Northridge 0-0, Sacramento State 0-0 and Cal Poly 0-1.

Setencich said Southern Utah runs the option.

"That stretches the field and the defense," he said.

Thunderbird quarterback Rick Robbins has thrown for 988 yards and seven touchdowns this season. Running back Daniel Harris has rushed for 580 yards. They also have deep threats in receivers Melvin Lowe, who averages over 20 yards per catch, and Shawn Jones, who averages over 30.

The Mustangs' stats are also impressive. The latest NCAA Division II Poll ranked Poly 20th. They are fifth-ranked in the West Region.

Sophomore quarterback Mike Fisher has had a major impact since coming to Poly from Santa Clara. Fisher is currently fifth in Division II in passing efficiency with a 153.2 rating, and he has thrown for 966 yards and 12 touchdowns with only one interception.

The offense racked up nearly 400 yards of total offense and an average of 41 points per game, fifth best in the nation.

The Mustangs have developed a strong running game led by Brian Fitz (417 yards and three touchdowns), Jacques Jordan (187 yards and seven touchdowns) and Mike Allhouse (team-high 5.8 yards per carry).

Senior wide receiver Joe Wade caught 12 passes for a team-leading 239 yards and five touchdowns.

Ryan Steen is sixth in the country with a 16.7

Cal Poly hosts one of volleyball's best

Mustangs face second-ranked Long Beach State 49ers and its hard-hitting offense

By Kristi Rampoldi
Daily Staff Writer

The Cal Poly women's volleyball team is in for some tough competition as it goes head to head Friday with Long Beach State, the second-ranked team in the nation.

Long Beach State boasts a 15-1 record. The team's only loss was to USC. The 49ers won every match in three straight games except one against Colorado State which went for four games.

The 49ers placed first in the Big West Conference last year with an undefeated 18-0 record. They eventually bowed out in the semifinals in the national championship tournament for a third-place finish.

Leading the team is senior middle blocker Danielle Scott. She is considered to be one of the best players in the country, if not the best, Cal Poly coach Craig Cummings said.

The 6-foot-2-inch Scott leads her team with 277 kills and 72 blocks this season. Scott was named First Team All-American last year, with 498 kills and 141 blocks.

Scott and Long Beach State's record may be intimidating, but Cummings said the 9-10 Mustangs have been playing well and with confidence.

"I think we're going to do well," Cummings said. "We're looking forward to the match."

Cal Poly team captain and senior outside hitter Andrea Lucadam said they are treating the 49ers just like any other team.

"They're definitely beatable," Lucadam said.

Cummings said home court advantage will help the team in its plight for an upset. "The girls are glad to be home," he said.

Cal Poly has dropped six straight to the 49ers. The series between the two teams stands at 7-8, Long Beach State.

Cummings added Long Beach State has an entertaining offense and people would enjoy watching them play.

The 49ers lead the nation in hitting percentage at .344 — 804 kills on 1,564 attempts. They also rank fifth in kills per game. Colorado University reins with 1,011.

The 49ers also rank third in the nation in assists per game with 733.

Cal Poly will face Long Beach State at 7:30 p.m. in Mott Gym.

Poly soccer teams play copycat

By Brad Hamilton
Daily Sports Editor

The Cal Poly men's and women's soccer teams have mirrored each other lately. In the four doubleheaders the teams have played, the results have been the same.

And in the bigger picture, the teams mimick each other by leading the California Collegiate Athletic Association.

Unfortunately, the teams also copied each other in their last doubleheader at Cal State San Bernardino. Both received their first blemishes in the CCAA standings by playing Wednesday's games to a draw. The men's team tied the Coyotes 0-0, while the woman tied their opponents 3-3.

The men had put up 20 goals in the last four games, allowing opponents only one goal. But in Wednesday's contest, none of the 17 shots on goal found their mark, and the team's offensive hot streak came to a grinding halt.

Gartner said Nelson will miss at least one game.

"(San Bernardino) is a real tough place to play," Gartner said. "(The Coyotes) are one of the best teams in the league."

"Losing Nelson certainly did not help," he added.

The women, usually the lower scoring half of Cal Poly soccer, surged for a three-goal second half. Unfortunately, so did Cal State San Bernardino. The score evened out after 90 minutes of play, despite the Mustangs outshooting the Coyotes 38 to 27.

The Mustangs jumped out to a 2-0 lead by the 74th minute. Junior midfielder Kolleen Kassis and freshman defender Jennifer Burk made good on passes from sophomore midfielder Wendy Jones. But in the last six minutes of the game four goals were scored.

Unfortunately for the Mustangs, only one of those goals was theirs. Freshman midfielder Nicole Gunion converted a pass from freshman forward Kristen Leonti into her seventh goal of the year to put the Mustangs up 3-1 with less than five minutes to play.

Five minutes proved to be too much time to keep the Coyotes at bay. Freshman defender Shawna Andrews booted a 30-yard penalty kick into the net at 86:50 and junior midfielder Pam Davenport scored the tying blow. She headed a pass from sophomore midfielder Erica Holguin into the net with only one minute left on the clock.

"It was a disappointing tie knowing we let it get away from us," said women's coach Alex Crozier. "It woke us up, though."

Despite the ties, the teams still hold CCAA leads.

The men's team hosts CCAA foe Cal State Bakersfield Friday and the women's team hosts Division I USC Saturday.

Both games start at 7 p.m. in Mustang Stadium. The women's next conference game is at Cal Poly Pomona at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday.
