Bakers want to spruce up Poly entrance

President's wife says Children's Center too noisy; ASI may be asked to pay for sound wall

By Anita Broughton
Senior Staff Writer

A beautification plan for the Crandall Way entrance to Cal Poly that may require ASI funding is being pursued by President Warren Baker and his wife. The plan is undergoing consideration by university officials, the Daily has learned.

John Stipicevich, director of operations for the University Union, said he met with Baker, his wife Carly Baker, Director of Facilities Planning Bob Kitamura and ASI construction inspector Michael DeNeve on Oct. 10 to discuss ways to improve the appearance of the entrance and reduce noise coming from the ASI Children's Center.

Stipicevich said the noise is disturbing occupants in the surrounding area, which includes the Alumni House and the Bakers' residence.

But some college deans and department heads, who spoke last week on condition of anonymity, said they have not experienced or heard of noise problems while holding all-day meetings at the Alumni House within the last year.

The Alumni House is used by various organizations, including the President's Cabinet, to hold meetings and conduct university business. Crandall Way is the primary entrance for visitors attending gatherings at the Alumni House and the Bakers' residence.

"President Baker is very concerned about his ability to conduct campus business in a professional environment that will best benefit the university," Stipicevich said.

Because children are naturally noisy, Mrs. Baker said she feels it was inappropriate to build the Children's Center on that side of the campus.

"It should have been placed somewhere else," she said. "I was shocked when it was going there. It was a mistake."

She said the proximity of the center to the Bakers' residence and Alumni House is a serious problem and makes it difficult to hold luncheons on her patio. She said she has to close the doors and windows to her house because of the noise.

"A lot of the entertainment for the major supporters of the university is done here," she said.

Saga-prone jury reaches verdicts in Denny case

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The jury in the Reginald Denny beating case revealed Saturday that it reached verdicts on some counts but could not decide others, including some of the most serious charges against the two defendants.

Superior Court Judge John Ouderkirk said he would read the verdicts that the jury had reached this morning. He dismissed the jury for the weekend and said he would ask them today whether further deliberations on the undecided counts would be fruitful.

Defense attorneys said it appeared the jury had either acquitted their clients or deadlocked on the most serious charges that could send the defendants to prison for life.

The jury reported in a court session that undecided counts against defendant Damian Williams included attempted murder of Denny, assault with a deadly weapon involving motorist Alicia Maldonado, a robbery charge involving motorist Takao Hirata, assault with a deadly weapon of Jorge Gonzalez, and assault with a deadly weapon of Fidel Lopez.

In addition, jurors had

Embargo against a hostile Haiti begins

Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — The first U.S. warship was spotted Sunday off the coast of Haiti, and the Pentagon said all six ships sent by President Clinton to enforce an imminent worldwide oil and arms embargo were in place.

The ships should begin patrolling international waters off Haiti by Sunday night, 24 hours before the embargo is scheduled to begin, said Stanley Schrager, spokesman for the U.S. Embassy in Haiti.

In Washington, a Pentagon spokesman, Maj. Steve Little, said all six ships were in place Sunday morning, although they might not be visible from shore.

But residents in one Port-au-Prince neighborhood reported seeing a gray warship, with a helicopter on the rear deck, off the coast. An Associated Press reporter on an aerial survey spotted it halfway between the island of Gonave and the capital. Schrager said he did not know which ship it was.

Meanwhile, fear was rising in Port-au-Prince as those opposed to the return of ousted President Jean-Bertrand Aristide announced they will shut down the city today. Previous shutdown calls have succeeded, with help from the military and allied civilian gangs.

Nearly all U.N. personnel have been evacuated from Haiti, and more than 1,000 Haitians jammed onto trucks Sunday to leave the capital.

On a street in the capital, gunmen killed a young woman who had been carrying a suitcase, presumably intending to leave. There were no further details.

At a downtown plaza, at least 150 people, including many children, were crammed onto the bed of one truck headed for the southern town of Les Caves. And an empty pickup truck was mobbed with Haitians even before it came to a stop in the downtown plaza.

"I've got five babies here. I can't leave, with them in Port-au-Prince," said Michel McKenzie Joseph, watching others depart under the hot Caribbean sun. Joseph, however, was hopeful that the sanctions and the U.S. warships would lead to the return of the elected Aristide.

"I love Aristide!" he shouted.

Bus drivers doubled their fares to take advantage of the panic. Storeowners have increased prices in the anticipation of the embargo, which will take effect unless Haiti's recalcitrant military agrees to yield power.

Schrager said U.S. policymakers considered such a quick concession unlikely.

4 years after quake, bureaucracy is biggest aftershock for S.F.

Associated Press

OAKLAND — From the drafty perch of a half-demolished overpass the good news: Work is about to begin on the Cypress Freeway, one the ugliest legacies of the 1989 earthquake.

What took so long? Reality, say the people who have spent four years trying to restore what 15 seconds of subterranean shaking destroyed.

"In the grand scheme of things, for a freeway it really didn't take that long (although) it seems like a long time to us," said Oakland City Councilwoman Natalie Bayton. "There were a lot of things that needed to get ironed out."

"This has really been fast track," said Caltrans spokesman Stephen Williams, pointing out that it can take decades for a freeway to be finished.

Bayton represents West Oakland, site of the worst calamity of the Oct. 17 earthquake. There, an elevated freeway collapsed, killing 42 people. Overall, the 7.1-magnitude quake killed at least 63 people and caused up to $10 billion in direct and indirect losses.

Since then, much has been repaired.

"There are some fundamental changes that have been made to the system," said OES spokesman Tom Mullins.

In San Francisco, retired Adm. John Bitoff now runs an Office of Emergency Services which, with a staff of three, is attempting to prepare the area for the next big one.

"The fact is that there have been major strides forward," he said.

When the earthquake hit the San Francisco Bay area, Bayton, then an aide to another council member, was talking on one end of the phone and I began to scream on the other end and I got under the desk and I thought to myself, 'Now, this is not a normal earthquake.' We ended our conversation very quickly."

In the immediate aftermath of the quake, survivors and

She also expressed concern that visitors who enter by Crandall Way get a bad first impression of the campus.

"(The appearance of the center) wasn't too bad until they started hanging the sheets — I guess they're for shade," she said.

According to Tonya Iversen, assistant director for the Children's Center, the bed sheets hanging in the play yard facing the street were intended to shield the children from the sun.

"We need to finish the landscaping in the play yard — like planting trees so the kids can have some shade," she said.

University planners said they may use left-over money from the Children's Center construction budget to help fund the campus beautification project.

But Iversen said she wasn't aware of remaining funds and a soundwall is not on the top of her wish list.

"I wouldn't call (the money) 'left over,'" she said. There are a lot of things we still need. If there's money to be spent on the Children's Center ... I'd buy some equipment for the kids and more resource materials."

Alumni Relations Director Steven Shockley said both his Alumni House office and the meeting room are subject to excessive noise most of the time. But Shockley said he doesn't blame the children or the center.

"Kids are kids, it's not their fault," he said. "But we still need to conduct business and it's hard to do when they are screaming in the background."

Shockley said he has received comments from guests about the noise, and thinks a soundwall will help. He said the door and windows of the meeting room face the center, so users must choose between noise and ventilation or tranquillity and hot, stagnant air.

"I can testify the noise is there every day — and we can't open the windows when it's hot," he said. "A soundwall will go a long way."

At the meeting, Mrs. Baker said the group discussed a new sign announcing the entrance to Cal Poly, landscaping for the Alumni House, a sound-proof wall and shrubs to replace the chain-link fence around the Children's Center.

No design plans or cost estimates have been completed, but funding will probably come from both ASI and the university, Stipicevich said.

"You can bet when it's done it will be the best looking entrance on campus," he said.

Business Affairs Vice President Frank Lebens said money remaining from the original budget approved for the construction of the Children's Center would most likely fund ASI's contribution to the project. State funds will likely pick up the balance, he added.

"It's not going to be easy finding the funds because our minor capital outlay budget was eaten up by the water line we put in to service the Rec Center," Lebens said. "It will have to come from the discretionary budget or the support budget."

Lebens said he hopes the existing funds would be sufficient. But he wouldn't rule out asking ASI to contribute more if necessary. He said the price tag would probably be small enough that it won't take funding away from academics or other student services.

"If we get (a cost) estimate that's off the chart, we won't pursue it," he said.

yet to reach a verdict on a special allegation — use of a deadly weapon — an aggravated mayhem charge against Williams involving the attack on Denny. Special allegation findings enhanced penalties.

Jurors also deadlocked on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon filed against defendant Henry Watson for an attack on truck driver Larry Tarvin.

Decided counts involving Williams included aggravated mayhem in the Denny attack, robbery of Denny with great bodily harm, assault with a deadly weapon on Hirata, assault with a deadly weapon on firefighter Terrance Manning and assault with a deadly weapon on firefighter Fred Mathis.

The decided counts involving Watson included attempted murder of Denny, robbery of Denny with great bodily harm, assault with a deadly weapon on Maldonado and robbery of Tarvin with great bodily injury.

Williams and Watson were named together or individually in a total of 12 counts filed in the case.

Williams and Watson are accused of taking part in the most notorious attack of the 1992 riot, the televised assault on truck driver Denny and crimes against other people at Florence and Normandie avenues.

Attorneys for both defendants said the developments indicated the jury had acquitted their clients on the most serious counts which carry potential life prison sentences.

"Certainly, it is a win, but I cannot declare victory at this point," said Edi Faal, who represents Williams. He added that it appeared Williams may have been acquitted of the most serious charges of attempted murder and aggravated mayhem.

the dead were pulled from their crushed cars and the rubble of the Cypress Freeway was cleared away. But the project stalled a few feet short of total demolition as residents, city and highway officials argued over how to replace it.

Another elevated freeway was out, meaning a new route had to be planned, this time one that would skirt the residential neighborhood rather than dissect it.

Next month, the last stage of demolition will begin and construction is scheduled to begin early next year. The project is budgeted at $695 million and is expected to be finished by the end of 1997.

In early October, Mayor Elihu Harris and other city officials stood on what remains of the Cypress Freeway to talk about recovery efforts. Repairs to City Hall are scheduled for completion by January 1995 and construction or demolition has begun on all but 500 of the 1800 buildings damaged.

Recovery here, of course, was drastically slowed by the 1991 Oakland Hills Fire — four days after the second anniversary of the earthquake — which killed 25 people and damaged or destroyed nearly 3,000 homes.

Bayton, interviewed as Sunday's anniversary approached, said the green light for the Cypress means a lot. "I think it's the beginning of literally the emotional process," she said. "The earthquake really made a lot of us feel that our city was very vulnerable... The reconstruction process will begin to reinforce that, yes, we're vulnerable, but we also can bounce back."

COMMENTARY

Campus alcohol sales: Not going to happen

By Sean Estrada

Re: "Nothin' brewin'," Mustang Daily, 10/12/93

Once again Mustang Daily has printed an article on the sale of alcohol on campus. As in most of the previous articles on this subject, this one suggested selling alcohol at Backstage Pizza or another campus location.

It's not going to happen.

For a variety of reasons alcohol should not and will not be sold at Cal Poly.

Why not?

First, the people who first proposed and promoted this idea have done nothing about it beyond creating a nightmare for ASI. It is obvious from statements made by former ASI board member Erica Brown and others within ASI that there has been strong reluctance to fully explore this issue. Research has been completed, but very few people know the results.

What really happened to that student survey proposal? Did it ever occur to the people doing research on this issue to survey everyone who would be directly affected by alcohol sales? As far as I know, no one has asked the employees of Foundation Food Service what their thoughts or concerns are about this issue.

There was supposed to be a survey of student opinion. To the best of my knowledge, this survey does not exist. Are the proponents of this issue scared of what the results might be?

Many people over 21 years old drink alcohol, but not all of them. Those students under 21 years old will not have access to areas on campus where alcohol is sold. Either of these groups could swing survey results towards "no alcohol."

Foundation Food Service controls the sale of food on campus. Any sale of alcohol, if it were ever approved, would take place at a food service location. Backstage Pizza is the location most often cited as ideal for the sale of alcohol.

People don't realize that alcohol sales would destroy Backstage Pizza. The statement "No cover charge, under 21 always welcome," is not just a catchy slogan; it is the reason Backstage Pizza exists. Students under the age of 21 need a place to eat, listen to music, and still get home safe and sober. Backstage Pizza meets those needs. If alcohol sales were allowed at Backstage Pizza, these needs would be unmet in San Luis Obispo.

If Backstage Pizza sold alcohol, someone would have to be posted at all entrances to check identification of all customers to ensure that no one under 21 was inside while it was being served.

The students behind the counter would have the added responsibility of remembering how much alcohol was served to each individual. It would become their responsibility to stop serving alcohol to drunks.

In an ideal world, no one would be able to drink enough to become a threat to themselves or others. But this is not an ideal world. Whenever alcohol is served someone under 21 will eventually sneak by and drink enough alcohol to get drunk.

People who are drunk are potentially dangerous. At the least, they can become extremely physically ill. When allowed to drive, drunks kill people. Women who get drunk at social events are increasingly becoming victims of date rape. Men who get drunk enough can seriously injure other people without a car — their bare hands will do just fine.

This scenario is not just limited to Backstage Pizza. Any business that allows mass quantities of alcohol to be served on the premises will be faced with these problems. They will also face serious liability in case of an injury.

Did anyone ask Nancy Williams, Foundation Food Service Director, if she wanted alcohol added to the items sold at her businesses? Did anyone ask her if she wanted to take the risks involved?

Did anyone ask Jeanette Kimball, manager of Backstage Pizza, if it was OK to abandon the core philosophy behind her business? Did anyone ask her employees if they could take the added stress of selling alcohol knowing that serving one too many drinks could get them in serious trouble?

I did.

I am a student, but I also work for Foundation Food Service as a custodian. I know all the Foundation Food Service directors, all the supervisors, and most of the student employees.

I asked my employers about this issue. I told them about my concerns over alcohol sales on campus. They listened to what I had to say, and their response was clear: "It's not going to happen."

• Sean Estrada is a graphic communications senior.

As far as I know, no one has asked the employees of Foundation Food Service what their concerns are about this issue.

If a teacher lectures to a computer and no one is there to listen...

Re: "Ancient lit. class enters modern era," Mustang Daily, 10/15/93

Mustang Daily's article about Professor Michael Orth's innovative great books course raises some interesting questions.

If professor Orth intends to conduct the course entirely by interactive computer conferencing, one might ask how his students will know whether he exists or is merely an ingenious computer program.

If he does indeed exist, Professor Orth might ask the same of his students.

I suggest that until our fine philosophy department can provide definitive answers to these questions, it is imprudent to embark on such a perilous journey along the information highway.

Ginsburg proving a forceful, talkative presence on high court

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Judging by her energetic questioning from the bench, Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg is quickly hitting full stride in her new job.

Intensive questioning last week by Ginsburg in a sexual-harassment case caused one lawyer to abandon his contention that the woman who had filed suit must prove the conduct harmed her performance at work.

"She basically pushed him to concede the case," said Georgetown University law professor Susan Deller Russ.

During her first two weeks of high court arguments, Ginsburg has asked lawyers frequent and probing questions on other issues such as drug forfeitures and civil rights.

She also has brought the perspective of a former women's rights advocate to the conservative court, said some observers who noted that Ginsburg at one point described the "old days" of sexist law professors.

"She hit the ground running," said Stuart M. Gerson, former acting attorney general in the Bush administration. "She has shown a great deal of energy and preparedness. Being on the court is awe-inspiring, but she is not awe-struck."

New justices often hold back when just arriving on the bench.

Justice David H. Souter waited three weeks to ask his first question in 1990. Now a frequent and incisive questioner, Souter admits finding the job overwhelming at first.

Ginsburg's performance is being likened to the equally fast start in 1986 by Justice Antonin Scalia, her former federal appeals court colleague.

"It's not just that she's asking lots of questions. It's that she's asking outstanding questions that get to the heart of the matter," said Georgetown University law professor Susan Low Bloch.

In the sex-harassment case, the lawyer representing the woman, who filed the lawsuit against a Tennessee company, didn't escape close questioning either. Ginsburg suggested he was making the case more complicated than it should be.

If a woman is told "you think like a woman" and a male coworker is not subjected to similar comments, "doesn't that make their job more difficult?" Ginsburg asked.

"Do you need anything further than that? The terms and conditions (of a job) aren't equal if one is called names and the other isn't," she said.

Ginsburg suggested an equally straightforward view during arguments on a civil rights case, pointing out that whatever penalties are required, the law has been clear since 1964: "That's part of the penalty; you forfeit the home where the drugs were kept."

Ginsburg's vigorous performance comes as no surprise to lawyers who argued before her on the federal appeals court.

"The potential is there for her to establish herself early on as a leading member of the Supreme Court," said Charles Cooper, a former assistant attorney general in the Reagan administration. But he added, "Saying that at this stage is quite treacherous."

Her influence in the court's decisions and opinion-writing remains an open question. It will depend in part on what opinions she assigned to write by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist or the senior justice on the prevailing side of a case.

"It's hard to say that she'll necessarily change a vote in this instance or change the way an opinion is written," said Marcia Greenberger of the National Women's Law Center. But Ginsburg's judicial philosophy and legal skill may be persuasive to other justices, she said.

Some issues are new to Ginsburg, particularly the death penalty.

But she already has staked out some territory on that question, writing a brief opinion explaining why she voted with the court's majority when it allowed the execution of a Missouri inmate.

1,000 Somalis decry U.N., Clinton at 'peace rally'

Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia — About 1,000 Somalis turned out for a peace demonstration Sunday as part of a campaign by Gen. Mohamed Ferrah Aidid to change his warlord image.

Some chanted "Down with the U.N.!" and "Down with Clinton!" but most of the people seemed content to listen to speakers and sing along to a lilting, traditional poem.

Aidid did not attend the rally. But top officials of his Somalia National Alliance told the crowd they want peace and blamed the United Nations for the conflict that has racked southern Mogadishu since early June.

The U.N. has blamed Aidid for deadly ambushes and mine attacks on its forces, saying he started the fighting to shore up his once-sagging support.

The violence has largely abated since Aidid announced a unilateral cease-fire a little over a week ago. He emerged from four months of hiding for a news conference Thursday to foreshadow the release of two captives, U.S. helicopter pilot Michael Durant and Nigerian trooper Umar Shantali.

Top officials of Aidid's Somalia National Alliance told the crowd they want peace and blamed the United Nations for the conflict.

The attacks on U.N. troops, which have driven division into the multinational peacekeeping force in Somalia and led to changes in American policy toward the U.N.-led operation, also raised Aidid's stature among many in his clan as a wronged freedom-fighter.

He now is trying to sell himself as a diplomat and peace-broker in an effort to re-enter the country's puzzle-like political picture.

Although he has continued some of his anti-United Nations rhetoric in recent broadcasts on his clandestine radio station, Aidid has toned down the stridency and spoken of reconciliation.

At the same time the peace rally was being held, some 50 members of the Quick Reaction Force, the U.S. Army group that has been relied on as the mission's iron fist, held target practice a few miles away.

Thousands of U.S. troops are coming back to Somalia to step up security in the wake of an Oct. 5 firefight that killed 18 American soldiers, a Malaysian peacekeeper and perhaps 300 or so Somalis.

Such peace rallies have been held each Thursday and Sunday for the last couple of weeks and speakers urged people to keep protesting.

The Aidid crowd this Sunday was more sedate and good-humored than some of the volatile mobs that have proven so unpredictable — and occasionally deadly — in the past.

There were chants of "Down with Clinton!" even though they were chanting "Up with Clinton!" last week, perhaps indicating displeasure with the fact that 70 Somalis remain detained following Durant's unilateral release.

The rhetoric was even mixed with laughter when one speaker said Durant was given a sarong and a Somali National Alliance T-shirt before his release on Thursday.

Women, wearing their usual brightly colored skirts and long scarves, and children made up most of the crowd, which was swelled by truckloads of people brought in from outlying areas.

Some waved the blue-with-white-star Somali national flag, while others carried portraits of Aidid. Vendors sold thick slices of watermelon from hand-pushed wooden wheelbarrows.

Referring to a July 12 attack by a mob in which four journalists were killed, one speaker reiterated Aidid's recent message that media should be allowed to work.

"It was kind of an accident, not planned," the unidentified speaker said. "We are very sorry about that. That was a big mistake. Journalists are not fighting us."

Somalia's story: Nation has seen tribal rivalries escalate into a global quagmire

Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia — The worst seemed to be over for Somalia in May, with starvation virtually ended and Mogadishu's streets safer that they had been for nearly four years.

Today, the United Nations and the United States find themselves looking for a way out of the tangled mess that was supposed to be a blueprint for future U.N. peacemaking operations.

June 5 — a month and a day after the U.N. took control of Operation Restore Hope from the United States — was the turning point. Twenty-four Pakistani troops were killed in coordinated ambushes.

Since then, the U.N. has found itself drawn into an urban guerrilla war and a public-relations quagmire that have stymied that agency's efforts at nation-building.

"This blueprint is very complex," U.N. special envoy Adm. Jonathan Howe admitted last week. "It may have to be redrawn in several ways."

In May, Pakistani troops took over control of south Mogadishu after the departure of most U.S. forces, patrolling the bustling streets in open pickup trucks.

Today, few military vehicles stray far from U.N. strongpoints. They are waiting for the last of the American tanks and Bradley fighting vehicles to arrive, along with the U.S. reinforcements that have been trickling in.

Rocks once were among the biggest threats for foreign troops. Now they face remote-controlled land mines, rocket-propelled grenades, and heavy-caliber machine guns. There are rumors of even heavier weaponry.

Gen. Mohamed Ferrah Aidid had seen his influence steadily erode following the arrival of foreign troops, but he appears to have won the tactical fight for now. One of the country's top warlords, he was blamed for the Pakistani massacre and ensuing attacks on U.N. troops.

He is disliked by some of Somalia's other clans, but has built a reputation among his own people as a wronged freedom fighter. The $25,000 U.N. bounty on his head seems a thing of the past, and he is trying to force his way back onto the political scene.

Both sides have suffered heavy casualties.

There's no accurate count of Somali fatalities, but they are believed to be close to 1,000, according to U.N. military officials.

U.N. casualties have been creeping upward: a few in a remote-controlled mine blast here, a handful in a firefight there. Since the U.N. took over the operation in May, 76 U.N. troops have died and more than 200 have been wounded.

A top official of Aidid's clan said not long after the U.N. began retaliatory strikes that Somali fighters would kill 1,000 foreign troops. "But we don't have to kill them all at once," he added.

Then came Oct. 3 and a nine-hour shootout with U.N. troops. It was the most intense battle in the city since the worst days of the civil war and last year's famine, in which more than 350,000 Somalis died.

Thousands of rounds of ammunition and dozens of rocket grenades later, 18 U.S. soldiers had been mortally wounded, along with a Malaysian peacekeeper and perhaps 300 Somalis. Another American was taken captive.

The incident underscored how difficult it is to gather accurate information here and how much Aidid has been underestimated.

Soldiers had been told Aidid had only 300 to 400 loyal followers. The force involved in the Oct. 3 battle was much larger.

Lt. Col. Bill David of U.S. Army's Quick Reaction Force, which has been handed many of the U.N.'s toughest jobs, said his 350 men faced more than 1,000 urban guerrilla fighters.

"Literally hundreds of RPG and mortar rounds were fired at us and thousands of rounds of automatic weapons fire and semi-automatic," David said.

Aidid hid from early June until emerging Thursday for a news conference to announce the imminent release of U.S. helicopter pilot Michael Durant and a Nigerian peacekeeper who had been taken captive Sept. 5.

He sounded like the diplomat he once was and tried to portray his clan as the wronged party in the dispute.

U.S. special envoy Robert Oakley, who with Eritrean and Ethiopian negotiators has been credited with arranging Durant's release, said he thinks Aidid feels he should be president of Somalia.

HAITI: U.S. joins world effort create embargo against country

The United States has told its 1,000 American nationals to be cautious but had no plans Sunday to follow the Canadians in recommending a mass departure, the U.S. spokesman said. A small group of Canadians filed onto commercial jetliners on Sunday.

"I wasn't planning on leaving until the called. I still don't want to," said Katika Isherwood, 31, of Toronto, who worked as a piano teacher at a private Roman Catholic school. "I didn't feel any particular danger at all."

Coup's aftermath reveals Russian parliament's decadent perks

Associated Press

MOSCOW — Since turning his tanks and troops on the Russian parliament, President Boris Yeltsin has unleashed another fearsome force: bureaucrats charged with dismantling the lawmakers' empire.

The parliament had swaddled itself in a Soviet-era system of perks and privileges until it was dissolved by a presidential decree on Sept. 21 and stormed by government troops Oct. 4.

The parliament had apartments, country homes, resorts, luxury cars, farms, bank accounts, charitable foundations and business enterprises. It employed 15,000 people and controlled some of Moscow's most sought after real estate.

It ran the federal pension fund and the federal road construction fund. It had its own television show, a newspaper, a magazine, vast libraries and archives, precious porcelain, paintings and other works of art.

At the heart of the empire was the 19-story white marble building on the Moscow River known as the White House.

"It was a city within a city," said Major Gen. Arkady G. Baskayev, commander of Interior Ministry troops in Moscow.

After vanquishing parliament at gun-

It had apartments, country homes, resorts, luxury cars, farms, bank accounts, charitable foundations and business enterprises. It employed 15,000 people and controlled some of Moscow's most sought after real estate.

point, Yeltsin transferred most of its assets — including the 14-year-old White House — to the executive branch. The new parliament to be elected Dec. 12 will have to find other quarters.

Yeltsin also unleashed the bean-counters: hundreds of auditors, accountants and investigators.

On Friday, the head of the White House Caretaker Commission, Alexander Pochinok, and Baskayev, commandant of the White House, released a two-page list of only a few of the buildings parliament owned.

Parliament was like a "waste conglomerate" and it would take "a long time" to inventory its sprawling realm, Pochinok said.

"Apartment blocks have been handed over," he reported. "All the car pools, vacation houses and health resorts have been handed over and all bank accounts were frozen."

It is not clear what will happen to parliament's assets, although Yeltsin was thinking of turning the charred and battle-scarred White House into the headquarters of the executive branch.

Nor is it clear how many apartments parliament doled out to its more than 1,000 members or whether only those who joined the armed resistance to Yeltsin will be stripped of their quarters.

Some deputies began moving out of their apartments last week, Pochinok said.

"The first batch left voluntarily," he said. "The rest, unfortunately, are being asked to leave."

Still unaccounted for, however, is the most famous legislative apartment: the 4,305-square-foot residence of parliament speaker Ruslan Khasbulaev, one of Yeltsin's most bitter enemies.

Khasbulaev is now making do with far more modest quarters: a spartan cell in Lefortovo Prison, where he awaits trial on charges of inciting mob violence.

Pochinok said auditors haven't figured out who owns the apartment, which was built for the late Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev. He said it was possible Khasbulaev had acquired it through some sort of privatization measure.

Untangling the affairs of the Renewal Fund — a controversial charitable organization controlled by parliament — and the 170 business enterprises it spawned will be even trickier than sorting out the apartments, Pochinok said.

He said the fund had tried to "evade" auditors by "renouncing" all ties to these businesses, presenting a colossal legal problem.

A presidential commission has said it suspects the fund was the center of a network of Swiss bank accounts and from companies that enriched, among others, Vice President Alexander Rutskoi, a leader of the hard-line opposition to Yeltsin.

Poly places first in rodeo

The Cal Poly women's rodeo team came out on top of the competition at the 1993 Cal Poly Fall Round-up Rodeo. The women compiled 185 team points for first place. West Hills College trailed the Mustangs with 150 points.

The Cal Poly men's team settled for second after collecting 500 points -- 65 points shy of West Hills College.

Agribusiness sophomore Dustin Mojonner won the all-around competition for the Mustangs.

Also Jimmy Valor topped the steer wrestling competition for first place. Cal Poly's defending national champion Ross Gomez finished third.

Construction management junior Tyler Keith and Chad Parker teamed up to take the team roping event with a time of 18.9 seconds.

Poly baseball fans like Phillies

By Julie Staszny
 Daily Staff Writer

Baseball fans around the world crowded in front of their television sets to watch the first two games of this year's World Series.

Battling for the 1993 championship are the Philadelphia Phillies and last year's champions, the Toronto Blue Jays. The Blue Jays jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the series with a 8-5 victory Saturday.

To fans, the World Series is not just any baseball game. It's the game of all games.

"(The World Series) is something I look forward to," said Cal Poly pitcher, senior Chris Herrera. "It's the fall classic. We (the baseball players at Cal Poly) have been watching (the Series) since we were old enough to pick up a bat and ball."

Cal Poly baseball's pitching coach Kent Agler said the World Series is what all players want to experience in their lifetime.

"It's a childhood dream and something (the players in the World Series) will never forget," he said.

But not everyone holds the Series in the same regard as Cal Poly's baseball team.

"I used to get really excited about the World Series, but all the playoff games have taken a little bit of the specialness away," said physical education department head Dwayne Head.

"I couldn't even tell you who's playing," said Public Safety Director Joe Risser.

"I like baseball, but I haven't really been keeping up with it this year," said business sophomore Jacques Hugel.

Regardless on how intensively people are watching the series, most fans have made their picks on who they'd like to win. The Phillies seem to be the favorite.

"I'm rooting for the underdog Phillies," said Howard West, executive assistant to the president.

"I'm pulling for the Phillies," Agler said. "I'd like to see the championship kept in the United States."

Herrera agreed.

"It would be a slap in the face to have Toronto win," he said.

Others still haven't decided.

"It's a tough choice," said Director of Fiscal Services Robert Dignan. "I don't particularly like either (team)."

Some people still haven't figured out who's playing in this year's World Series.

"I'm rooting for the Giants," joked mathematics junior Amy Dunn-Ruiz.

Most fans plan to watch as much of the game as their schedule will allow.

"My roommates and I plan to watch the game together," said environmental engineering sophomore Brice Freeman. "(The Series) is an excuse not to do homework for seven days while the game's on."

Head said he won't follow the Series fanatically. "If it gets down to the seventh game I'll watch it," he said.

Whatever the outcome, the '93 World Series will be this year's ultimate baseball experience, according to Cal Poly's third baseman John Macalutas.

"Anything and everything can happen," he said.

Women's soccer shells short USC goalie

By Alex P. Ramos
 Daily Staff Writer

After a tough tie with Cal State San Bernardino last Wednesday, the sixth-ranked Cal Poly women's soccer team worked their offense to a 4-0 victory against USC Saturday at Mustang Stadium.

The Mustangs kept the USC goalkeeper busy, booting 17 shots on goal to the Trojan's six. They also capitalized on the Trojan goalkeeper's height, lobbing three of the four goals over 5-foot 3-inch freshman Cathy Zoccoli.

Women's head coach Alex

Crozier said the Mustangs' consistent offensive pressure proved to be a crowd pleaser. Several shots coming close enough to bounce off the goal's crossbar and posts kept the crowd on its feet.

"We had a good, lively crowd and it was a good game to have fun and win," Crozier said.

Crozier began to pull the starters midway through the second half.

One of the substitutes, freshman defender Lori Wagner, capitalized on the opportunity. The third goal of her college career was a replica of her sister's, junior midfielder Michelle Wagner.

Both Wagners lobbed shots over the goalies head from 20-yards out.

In addition to the Wagners, the rest of the Mustangs worked well as a team, said junior midfielder Kolleen Kassis.

"When the balls were hitting the crossbar, people were following up all the way," Kassis said.

She felt the team won more of the free balls in the second half which allowed the team to spend more time in the offensive zone.

"We worked really hard the second half," Kassis said.

Men's soccer defeats Roadrunners without top scorers

By Tracy Brant Colvin
 Daily Staff Writer

Even without their two top scorers, the Cal Poly men's soccer team stayed atop the California Collegiate Athletic Association with a 2-0 victory over Cal State Bakersfield Friday at Mustang Stadium.

The Mustangs' leading scorer senior midfielder Mike Nelson and assist leader junior forward Ryshiem Henderson did not play in the game due to injuries. Senior midfielder Chris Corona played in Friday's game, but was removed from the game after sustaining an injury.

"We are battered and bruised," head coach Wolfgang Gartner said. "Other people needed to come through and they did."

One of those who came through was senior defender Dan Fish. He scored the game's first goal early on when he dribbled past three Roadrunners and beat the goalie with a shot that bounced off the right goalpost and into the net.

After the game Nelson dubbed it "the goal of the year."

Thirty minutes later in the first half it was Fish again. This time he chalked up an assist by feeding junior midfielder Duc Le, who finessed a slow roller past the Roadrunner goalie.

The win moved the Mustangs closer to the conference title. "Our goal is to win the league," Gartner said. "If we can get back to full strength with them (Nelson, Henderson and Corona) we have a chance (of a playoff birth)."

Cal Poly's next game is on Wednesday at Cal Poly Pomona at 7 p.m.

FOOTBALL: Mustangs host AWC leader Sacramento State Saturday at Mustang Stadium

want to do."

The double runback for touchdowns off blocked punts was such a rare feat, that ESPN mentioned it in their Sportscenter show.

In the second quarter, the two teams traded field goals to give Cal Poly a 24-6 halftime lead.

After a scoreless third quarter, the Mustangs went on another 80-yard drive on a drive ending on a Fisher 10-yard touchdown strike to running back Dave Vieler to put the game out of reach.

Vieler later threw his own touchdown pass to sophomore receiver Brett Barnes to finish at 38-6.

The Mustang defense limited the T-Bird option to 122 yards on the ground. Thunderbird running back Daniel Harris came in averaging 116 yards rushing per game, but was held to 42 Saturday.

Southern Utah receivers were also shut down. Melvin Lowe and Daniel Rederford combined for 23 catches for 390 yards in their first five games. They were held to one catch for all of one yard against the Mustang defense.

The Mustang running game stalled, but Fisher had another outstanding day, completing 17 of 25 passes for 202 yards and two touchdowns. Fisher now has thrown for 1,168 yards and 14 touchdowns on the season with one interception.

"Our running game had some problems because of the lack of depth," Pettas said. "But we overcame that with our throwing game."

Tight end Jeff Radcliffe caught five passes for 48 yards and split end Joe Wade caught four for 58 yards.

"We went in prepared," Pettas said. "We had a goal in mind to beat them. Both the offense and defense played good games."

Cal Poly will be facing Sacramento State, the new leader of the AWC, next week at home.

They will play their final conference game against Cal State Northridge on Nov. 6 at home as well.

"Every game from now on is a big game," Setencich said.

INVITATIONAL: Men's team runs past UCLA for first place finish

The battle between Cal Poly and UCLA began at the start of the race. UCLA's Karen Hecox took control of the lead while Cal Poly sophomore Angela Orefice sprinted into sixth position after the first half-mile. Cal Poly sophomore Nika Horn, junior Kelly Flathers and freshman Melanie Hand followed in a pack.

Around the last loop of the course, Hecox led by 20 seconds. Her lead held, and she crossed the line first in 17:07.

Orefice was the top finisher for the women Mustangs. She ran across the finish line in seventh place in 18:04. Horn and Flathers placed ninth and tenth in 18:28.

"I felt OK out there," Orefice said. "I could have run a better race. I wanted to be more aggressive."

Horn and Flathers worked off of each other throughout the race. Both finished in 18:28 to bring three top-ten finishes to Cal Poly.

"We tied UCLA. That's almost like a win."

Terry Crawford
Cross country head coach

"Nika and Kelly really had a breakthrough race today," head coach Terry Crawford said.

"They ran well without their top runner," she said. "Every girl had to dig deeper. But they came through under the gun."

Jennifer Lacovara, Cal Poly's star runner, was out with an injured foot.

Even without Lacovara, Cal Poly ran to a tie with UCLA for an overall first place at 64 points. UC-Santa Barbara's team finished third with 88 points.

"We tied UCLA. That's almost like a win," Crawford said. "Overall, I couldn't be happier."

The team's next race is at the CCAA Championships at Bonelli Park in Walnut Saturday, Oct. 23.

No Goal

I don't wanna be a cowboy no more

When I stared into the bull's black, racquetball-sized eyes and noticed no fence separated us, all my aspiration to become a rodeo cowboy dissipated as fast as Debbi Gibson's career.

Such was the scene as I ventured behind Collett Arena Wednesday to work on a rodeo story. I was talking about the weekend's events with rodeo coach Clay Robinson, coach-to-be in January Randy Wilson and another reporter when my attention turned toward a loud ruckus.

To my dismay I saw a 1,000-pound, burnt-red bull clumsily jump over a six-foot fence.

So there I was, armed with a Quick Clic Bic pencil and a notepad, standing 40-feet in front of a rodeo practice bull that is raised to kick cowboy butt. Robinson told us to get behind him. No problem. Robinson is a nice guy, but I was more than willing to let this guy be my rodeo clown and take a bull horn in the gut for me.

I walked behind Robinson and hopped up on a fence ready to bail over it in case the bull started charging. I didn't know what to do. I remembered someone telling me never look a bull in his eyes because it pisses him off. Or maybe that was the rule for an alcoholic, I forget.

I also remembered "Crocodile Dundee," so I closed my three middle fingers and extended my thumb and pinky and hummed the theme song to "Hee Haw." Nothing.

The bull started coming at me. Actually, the bull was trouncing towards an open gate in another direction, I was just scared and interpreted any movement as a charge against me — kind of like whoever complained about the Ski Club's "Crazy Dude."

After the bull was corralled and I checked my shorts, I glanced over the fence to see what I would have had to hurdle to avoid a horn enema.

All of a sudden I understood why I got a C minus in that critical thinking class. I was about to bail out of one 1,000-pound bull's way and leap into a pen full of seven muscle-rippled, horned, Mack-truck-looking bulls.

And I used to think it would have been cool to ride one of those big, old, lump-of-cowboy-hating demons. Not anymore.

Bull riding was the last rodeo aspiration I punted out of my life. The previous dream I held was 10 years ago. I longed to be the next world champion calf roper.

I used to practice my roping and wrestling techniques on my goat. When the goat wasn't cheap-shooting my knees with his horns, I used to lasso him, flip him on his back and wrap my jump rope around his legs.

That dream and all the fun came to an end when I walked into the backyard and noticed Gruffy was laying on his back with his feet in the air as if he were beckoning me to rope him. But old Gruffy was as stiff as President Baker was on his decision to cut engineering technology and home economics.

Cross country finishes first

By Cynthia L. Webb
Daily Staff Writer

Cal Poly's cross country teams ran past the competition in Saturday's Cal Poly Invitational at Laguna Lake Park.

The invitational brought the Mustang runners head-to-head with teams from UCLA, Cal-Berkeley, UC-Santa Barbara and Fresno State. The race also pitted the Mustangs against other opponents, such as San Diego State, Humboldt State, Cal State Los Angeles, University of Puget Sound and Southern Utah University.

The gun went off at 10:17 a.m. and so did the Cal Poly men as they battled to position themselves ahead of the competition.

By the first mile, Cal Poly clustered into a strong pack composed of junior Coley Candaele, senior Dan Berkeland, senior Scott Hempel and freshman Ryan Winn.

The pack of four had control over the race, while Fresno State and UCLA runners followed closely behind.

After the three-mile mark, Hempel increased his lead by ten seconds over his three teammates. Candaele, Berkeland and Winn remained in a pack.

Hempel sprinted across the finish in 31:00. Candaele (31:20), Berkeland (31:26) and Winn (31:33) followed for the first-through-fourth sweep.

Cal Poly's women used the same strategy to earn a tie against UCLA.

Volleyball falls short in bid for upset

Long Beach State's offense thunders past Cal Poly with ease

By Kristi Rampoldi
Daily Staff Writer

The largest crowd the women's volleyball team has drawn this year cheered vigorously as the Mustangs (9-11) and Long Beach State 49ers (16-1) walked off the court Friday night.

The fans were not cheering the Mustangs for a victory, but for scoring a respectable amount of points against the second best team in the nation.

The Mustangs were effectively shut out in three games by scores of 7-15, 6-15, 5-15 before 1,117 fans in Mott Gym.

The 49ers have only had two matches that went over three games — a five-game loss to USC and a four-game win over Colorado University. They have kept eight teams below 19 points in a match — two below seven points.

The Mustangs played well but not great, said coach Craig Cummings. "We sided out well against them," he said.

Cal Poly had problems scoring more points because of 10 serving errors. "We had too many of those (service errors)," Cummings said.

Cummings said many of the service errors came from trying to serve aggressively. "We were trying to force them out of their offense," he said. "A team like Long Beach can force you into mistakes."

Senior outside hitter Andrea Lucadam attributed some of the teams unforced errors to nervousness. "We were trying a little too hard at the beginning," she said.

Long Beach State's middle blocker, Danielle Scott, pummeled the ball for a team leading 16 kills. Scott is a candidate for National Player of the Year honors. She has led her team in kills in all but one match.

"Without sounding too cocky, a game like this is good for us because it allows us to practice on plays in a game situation," Scott said. "It is also good for Cal Poly because it allows them to measure themselves and find out where they are against teams at a higher level."

Mustang sophomore middle blocker Jennifer Kaylor and outside hitter Meygan Androvich played well for the Mustangs with 11 kills each.

Cummings is optimistic about future play against Long Beach. "We held our own," he said. "We played a lot better against them than two years ago."

On Friday, the Mustangs will play Fresno State in Mott Gym at 7:30.

Football wins again

Win earns brief mention on ESPN's Sportscenter

By Jeffrey Jon
Daily Staff Writer

The game between the Cal Poly Mustangs and the Southern Utah Thunderbirds Saturday was supposed to be big. Instead, the Mustangs used their supposed chief conference rival as their latest punching bag. When it was over, Cal Poly stood on top of Southern Utah, 38-6, behind freshman cornerback Facio Benavides' two blocked punts returned for touchdowns.

"It was a very big win for us," head coach Lyle Setench said.

"This game shows us that we can play with anybody (and) that we are a good football team," offensive coordinator John Pettas said.

The Mustangs have outscored their opponents 200-46 in their last four games, including 127-21 in the first half alone.

The T-Birds were co-favorites with the Mustangs to win the American West Conference in a preseason coaches' poll. Coming into this game, Southern Utah was atop the AWC standings.

Now, Cal Poly, Southern Utah and UC-Davis are tied for second place with a 1-1 conference mark. Sacramento State, due to their 31-30 road victory against Cal State Northridge, leads the conference with a 1-0 record.

The game was closer than indicated with each team getting around 300 yards of total offense and having nearly the same amount of time possession of the ball.

Southern Utah scored first on a 29-yard field goal by kicker Cory Beynon. However, Cal Poly went on a 16-play, 80-yard drive that was capped off by a 24-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Mike Fisher to freshman receiver Jon Peck.

Before the first quarter was over, Cal Poly had made their move. Two blocked punts run back for touchdowns by Benevides within 1:25 of each other put the Mustangs up 21-3.

"That kind of broke the game wide open for us," Pettas said. "Getting those two touchdowns gave us an early lead," said assistant coach Mike Church. "It forced them (Southern Utah) to have to do things they didn't
