Open House picking up steam

• Poly admin agrees to help finance event

By Lisa M. Hansen
Daily Staff Writer

Cal Poly administrators agreed this week to have the university fund part of the $15,000 needed to operate the April Open House — a move that has ended months of worry for the festival's planners.

Student Affairs, Administration and Finance and Academic Affairs have agreed to pay approximately $3,000 each. ASI will pay an expected $4,000.

Since the outset of festival planning, Open House planners have wondered how the two-day event would be financed.

Planners were thrown for a loop early this week when safety and facilities cost estimates came in at $13,000. In early January, Open House was projected to cost about $5,000.

The ASI Board of Directors authorized a $5,000 subsidy for Open House three weeks ago. Open House Assistant Chair Louie Brown said that money would act as a cushion if expenses over $13,000 were incurred.

"When we heard that news, it was a big blow," Brown said. "Basically we went to them and said, 'How can you help?' We just hoped that they would come back to us with good news."

Vice President for Administration and Finance Frank Lebens said mutual cooperation is evident.

"There is a spirit of cooperation, clearly," he said. "I think everyone wants this to be a successful event. Mutual enthusiasm is shared by everyone."

This enthusiasm, according to Brown, is a sign that the university is taking the festival seriously.

• Meeting sees overflow crowd of clubs

Daily Staff Report

Almost every club, organization and major had representatives at the sign-up session for the approaching Open House scheduled for April 22 and 23.

The line went from Room 286 of the Fisher Science building all the way out to Poly View Drive.

"We're expecting between 150 and 200 people to sign up today," said Assistant Chair of the Open House Committee Louie Brown.

Many students seemed angry for having to wait in such a long line but were excited about the event itself.

"This is going to be a great weekend," natural resource management sophomore Matt Milton said. "I'm really fired up about it. I just hope people come to our Smoothie booth."

Milton was there to represent Phi Kappa Psi fraternity.

To plan for the gala event, the Open House Committee has been meeting on campus for weeks. The main assignment for the latest meeting was to file the proper forms and requests for the upcoming event.

U.N. seeks more troops to hold Bosnian truces

More than 11,000 soldiers requested to quell increasing cease-fire violations

By Robert H. Reid
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — French peacekeepers fired a warning burst from a machine gun Thursday to quiet another truce violation along the Sarajevo front, and U.N. officials appealed for nearly 11,000 more soldiers.

Yasushi Akashi, chief of the U.N. mission in former Yugoslavia, said the troops are needed to secure truces between Serbs and the Muslim-led government in Sarajevo, and between Croats and Muslims in central and southwestern Bosnia.

He said both cease-fires generally were holding but expressed concern about increasing violations.

"We very much need not only the full compliance by the parties of the agreements they have already accepted or reached, but also we ... need additional resources, additional personnel," he said in Zagreb, Croatia.

Akashi said he needed 4,600 more soldiers for Sarajevo and 6,050 for the rest of Bosnia.

With the United States declining to commit troops without an overall peace accord, and Britain, France and Canada reluctant to send more troops, it was unclear where Akashi might get additional peacekeepers.

The U.N. mission's military chief, Gen. Jean Cot of France, said reinforcements were needed immediately to avoid "losing what has been done."

Cot had harsh words for the U.S. decision not to commit ground troops unless the Bosnian factions work out a peace settlement. That policy is "not very courageous," he said.

Would-be VPs vie for job at campus forums

By Lisa M. Hansen
Daily Staff Writer

A nationwide search for a new vice president for student affairs — students' most vital link to the university's policymakers — is in its final stages.

The position is expected to be filled by July 1.

Representatives from Health and Psychological Services, Ethnic Studies, Residential Life and Education, ASI and Academic Senate attended an Open Forum Tuesday and Thursday, the fourth and fifth of six scheduled open forums where candidates give a brief presentation about themselves and answer questions from audience members. Arthur Byrd, vice president for student services at Allan Hancock College in Santa Maria, spoke Tuesday.

At Thursday's forum, Juan Gonzalez, vice president for student services division at California State University, San Bernardino gave his presentation.

Other candidates hail from Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Washington, according to Selection Chair

Hot temperatures expected to vanish

Daily Staff Report

The unusually high temperatures which kissed the Central Coast in the middle of the week won't carry over into the weekend, according to the National Weather Service.

Cool air coming in off the Pacific Ocean will drop high temperatures into the 60s for Saturday and Sunday. A 20 percent chance of rain was possible from a storm front scheduled to hit Northern California on Saturday.

Poly bio wants to build aquarium

By Valeska Bailey
Daily Staff Writer

Some Cal Poly marine biology students may be getting hands-on experience — and the Central Coast a new tourist attraction — if a proposal for an aquarium at Dinosaur Caves is accepted by the Pismo Beach City Council.

Chairman of the Biological Sciences Department V.L. Holland, along with other biological sciences department staff and professors, has been working on a project called "Central Coast Aquarium," a proposed exhibit at Dinosaur Caves in Shell Beach.

The project would give Cal Poly students in the marine biology and fisheries concentrations an opportunity to enhance their education and research skills. Additionally, the aquarium would be open to the public as a tourist attraction.

Holland said the project's organizers think it is necessary to have community support to ensure the project's success.

Students in the marine biology and fisheries program currently use the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. marine laboratory at Diablo Canyon for their research.

The proposal hasn't been formally submitted to the Pismo Beach City Council because the plan is only in a discussion stage. The project group recently met with Pismo Beach Mayor Tim Bittner to discuss plans for the aquarium. Bittner said he wants the aquarium to be open to the Shell

Prisoner releases leave PLO unfazed

Despite freeing of 1,000, Palestinians still stalling talks

By Said Ghazali
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, Occupied West Bank — Israel freed 400 Palestinian prisoners Thursday in an effort to stop violence ignited by the Hebron mosque massacre, while it faces growing defiance from Jewish extremists.

Despite releasing 1,000 prisoners the past three days, there has been no sign that outraged Palestinians in the occupied territories would stop protesting and return to stalled peace talks.

"This release won't change the hatred between us and the settlers," said 19-year-old Yasser Sharabati, a Palestinian activist freed Thursday.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin is facing growing defiance from extremist Jewish settlers in the territories. Following last week's attack by a set-tlar who mowed down at least 39 Palestinian worshipers in a mosque, the army disarmed 18 settlers and banned them from Palestinian areas.

The crackdown has focused on Kach and Kahane Lives, militant Jewish movements inspired by the late Meir Kahane, an extremist anti-Arab militant.

Settler leaders Thursday called on them to resist being disarmed.

One leader, Uri Ariel, said settlers shouldn't use violence against troops. The crackdown sharpened their confrontation with the government.

One of the fugitives, Nathan Levy, brazenly attended a brief news conference Thursday in Jerusalem with nine Kach activists. A senior Kach leader, Michael Ben-Ari, denounced "the witch-hunt" and declared: "The majority of people are behind the persecuted Kach movement."

The national news agency Itim reported that radical settlers in Hebron and the nearby settlement of Kiryat Arba have said they won't surrender their weapons if attempts are made to disarm them.

The mosque gunman, New York native Dr. Baruch Goldstein, came from Kiryat Arba, and his grave there has now become a shrine for Israeli extremists. Goldstein was beaten to death by Palestinians after the massacre.

Five Kach members were arrested Thursday trying to disrupt a Jerusalem demonstration protesting the massacre.

Two Kach leaders have been detained since Sunday. Three others are fugitives.

For the Israelis, the crackdown was a radical move on a highly emotive issue.

Poly student arrested on marijuana charges

By Joy Nieman
Daily Staff Writer

Police arrested a Cal Poly student Feb. 23 on charges of possession for sale and cultivation of marijuana.

Math sophomore Jon Van Den Akker, 20, was arrested at his residence at 210 Grand Ave., Public Safety Investigator Raymond Berrett said. Van Den Akker was later released on $4,000 bail. Police said they recovered 84 grams of marijuana, marijuana seeds, a scale and a pager.

The arrest came in the wake of recent reports of an increase in marijuana use on campus. Berrett said Public Safety has been working with the Sheriff's Narcotics Task Force on the issue.

"Last quarter, there were more incidents of marijuana

(on campus) in one month than all of last year," Berrett said.

Interim Police Chief Steve Schroeder said he has noticed an increase this year in parties where marijuana is smoked. Since September, Public Safety has responded to 24 calls about marijuana on campus.

"Most calls we've had regarding marijuana use have come from Tenaya Hall," Schroeder said. "That's probably jacked up our overall increase."

Between August and December, Public Safety responded to eight calls about marijuana incidents at Tenaya Hall compared to 13 for all other residence halls combined. Most calls were for the smell of marijuana, according to police reports.

BOSNIA: U.S. commander says Serbs have almost reached arms compliance

The United States does have a large contingent of warplanes in the NATO force that patrols Bosnia's skies. Two U.S. F-16 fighter jets shot down four Serb warplanes that U.N. officials said bombed a Bosnian government arms factory Monday about 45 miles northwest of Sarajevo.

A NATO threat to use warplanes to bomb Serb artillery around Sarajevo ended the shelling of the besieged capital by forcing the Serbs to remove their tanks, howitzers and mortars.

In Washington, the commander of U.S. forces in Europe said the Serbs had almost completely complied with the ultimatum, removing or surrendering nearly all of the 600 heavy weapons surrounding Sarajevo.

"I'd say we're close" to full compliance, Gen. George Joulwan told the U.S. Senate Armed Services Committee on Thursday.

The ultimatum on Sarajevo bolstered a U.N.-mediated truce that has generally held for three weeks.

A U.N. spokesman, Maj. Jose Labandeira, said Serb troops opened fire with small arms on government troops at the Jewish Cemetery in downtown Sarajevo early Thursday. French peacekeepers in the area then fired a warning volley of machine-gun fire.

That followed an incident Wednesday in which Serbs shot four rocket-propelled grenades at government troops near the cemetery, prompting a gun battle. U.N. officials quoted Serbs as saying they fired the grenades because government soldiers were violating the truce by reinforcing trenches.

Labandeira said three more grenades were fired Thursday but peacekeepers had not determined who was responsible.

"Both sides are very, very close in that area, and it has always been very tense," said Lt. Col. Bill Aikman, another U.N. spokesman. "We are monitoring it, and we expect that it will not continue."

U.N. officials said the two sides agreed Thursday on three-man patrols along confrontation lines to bolster their truce. Each patrol would have one U.N. monitor, accompanied by a Croat and a Muslim, both unarmed.

The Croats also agreed to allow the Bosnian government to maintain weapons in six areas where Croats, Muslims and Serbs are in close proximity, but only if the Muslims use their weapons solely against the Serbs.

Earlier Thursday, Croatian President Franjo Tudjman praised Tuesday's agreement and said it would help him reclaim Croatian land held by rebel Serbs since a six-month war between Croatian Serbs and Croats.

He said Croatia had been promised financial help and quick reintegration of Croatia's Serb-occupied territory. He offered no details.

U.N. officials said front lines between Muslim and Bosnian Croat troops were generally stable. Aikman said the southwestern city of Mostar was quiet except for five shells that exploded in the Muslim-held eastern side late Wednesday.

Muslims and Croats signed an agreement Tuesday in Washington to cease hostilities and form a federation.

Collapse of moral structure leads to senseless violence

Last week Los Angeles Police Department rookie officer Christy Hamilton was murdered by a teenager with a gun.

After listening to The Doors song, "The End," Christopher Golly shot his father with a semi-automatic rifle, purchased for him by his father. He then called 911, told them he had murdered his father and proceeded to set up an ambush outside his home.

When Hamilton, just four days out of the police academy, arrived at the home in her squad car, shots rang out. Hamilton was shot through the arm hole of her bullet-proof vest. She died just over an hour later.

Golly had told a friend earlier in the day he was planning to kill his father, kill a cop then kill himself. Golly followed through with his plan.

Hamilton, a 45-year-old mother, had waited until her children had grown up before completing college and following in the footsteps of her father — who had served on the force for more than 30 years.

The tragedy of this incident is heightened by the fact that Hamilton was the ninth Los Angeles police officer to be killed in the line of duty in the last year.

This raises a couple of distressing issues.

The first is the ever-present issue of gun control. "Wait a second, you're talking about giving up Constitutional rights!" you say. For the vast majority of gun owners, I'm talking about a right legislated by the Supreme Court.

It's not that I am really against people owning guns, but I think a "common sense" test of some sort should be required — maybe even some sort of training certificate too.

After all, don't you have to complete some sort of driver's education to operate a car? But to buy a gun, all you have to prove is that you aren't looney and you haven't been convicted of a felony.

Several years ago, in an office building in San Diego, one man was showing his friend his new gun. The gun went off, went through a wall and into a woman's head. My friend lost his mother that day.

The second issue is the decline of the of the American family. Golly had been expelled from high school, and was generally considered a troubled youth. This society has put an ever-decreasing value on the family — and concentrated on good old numero uno.

Society's morals have declined to the point where "nothing is wrong as long as it is good for me."

For example:

- The savings and loans bail-out will cost American taxpayers billions of dollars because some people decided money was more important than trust and honesty.
- The ever-increasing incidence of date rape and violence against women.
- The Los Angeles riots after the acquittal of four police officers in the Rodney King beating. Destruction of property, theft, assault, battery and mayhem — all in protest? Whatever happened to civil disobedience?
- Abortion and Dr. Jack Kevorkian have shown us human life is cheap. Kevorkian will do it for free. And an abortion is cheaper than one year of Cal Poly education.

America needs to return its moral base: God. Violence and depravity, on the current scale, are unparalleled in American history.

The kindly police officer walking his beat exists no more. Officers now live in constant fear for their lives — and rightly so. We should have never needed to mourn officer Christy Hamilton. She should still be with us.

I hope and pray our society will change its ways. But I see no end in sight.

REPORTER'S NOTEBOOK

Ogling each other as we drink our Diet Cokes

By Patrick O'Brien

There is nothing more pleasing to the eye than a nicely shaped, naked woman.

The most beautiful work of art on the planet is the human body. I happen to prefer the female model, but a significant segment of the population would undoubtedly opt for the male.

Whichever you prefer, the fact remains that most of us like to look at people. And usually, the less our object of admiration is wearing — the better.

If you were offended by my reference to humans as objects in the last sentence, I'd like to smack your face and tell you to snap out of it. After all, looking at beautiful people is part of our human nature.

It has been deeply ingrained in my head that admiring a woman's physical attributes degrades that woman to a less-than-human status.

As a child I was told looking at "dirty" magazines would only give me the wrong impression of women. I agree with that. They are definitely bad for children to look at. Little kids don't have the faculties to deal with the material in a mature way.

Kids also can't appreciate the beauty of the subjects in those magazines (of course, not all magazines are meant to be appreciated that way).

But adults can deal with, and appreciate, sensual pictures of people (either fully-clothed or naked) in a constructive way.

Still, people argue it is degrading.

"After so many years of being degraded, the tables have finally turned. Although men probably never gave it a second thought, women probably noticed it immediately."

There is some truth to that. Looking solely at a person's body can divert attention away from their inner beauty.

So what. You can get at least as much enjoyment from someone's body as you can from their brain. The real problem with this, as I see it, is the one-sidedness of the issue.

It seems like only men can degrade — and only women can be degraded.

Throughout history, women have been admired for their physical characteristics far more often than men.

Most nude artwork is of women, and it is far more common to see a woman posing or frolicking in a bathing suit on TV or in a magazine.

Understandably women feel victimized.

And understandably I was very surprised when I saw the new commercial for Diet Coke.

The commercial shows a group of female employees that meet at a window every morning to ogle a male construction worker as he takes off his shirt — while taking a Diet Coke break.

As the man stands there half-naked, the camera scans the women's faces. All of them are fighting to hold in their drool. The funny thing is, most of the women I know act like that at least once in a while, even though few will admit it.

But what surprised me most, was that men were being degraded by women on national television. After so many years of women being degraded, the tables have finally turned. Although men probably never gave this concept a second thought, women probably noticed it immediately.

There are two new roles being played. Men — instead of women — are the object of ogling. And women — instead of men — are the oglers. If this trend continues, maybe men will better understand what women have been going through for centuries.

Maybe we are entering an expressive revolution. Maybe men and women will be able to express their true feelings, instead of subjecting those feelings to lopsided societal standards.

The problem with that is, men don't seem to mind being "degraded."

When the Diet Coke commercial first aired, a bunch of talk show people wanted to hear men's reaction. They asked: "As a man, does that commercial offend you?" As far as I know, there isn't one man in the country that did, or would, answer in the affirmative.

What's there to be offended about?

Like I said before, it's only natural that women like to check out men, or women, or whatever.

And if a woman wants to check me out, I not only welcome it, I encourage it. I have enough confidence in the value of my inner-being that it doesn't bother me if a woman decides she only wants to enjoy my body.

I know there are at least 100 women readers complaining right now. "This guy's a pervert, and I don't act like the women in that commercial."

First of all, be careful when calling someone a pervert. For as I always say, perversion is in the eye of the beholder.

And second, you do think like those women in the commercial, you're probably just afraid to admit it.

Society has made it acceptable for men — but not women — to be pigs. That's why men are more open about their hormone activity.

This could get dangerous, however.

If women become more sexually expressive, they will likely become more sexually aggressive.

That could lead to an huge explosion of uncontrolled sexual activity, which could lead to disease and other nasty things.

But, like they always say, it's better to have loved and gotten strange green things in your underwear — than never to have loved at all.

The bottom line is, through this reversal of roles, maybe men and women will finally understand how the other half feels.

I say, be free, women of the world. As Madonna says, "Express yourself."

VP: Student Affairs post expected to be filled by mid-March

Richard Equinoa. The search began last fall, and a job offer to one of the candidates is expected by mid-March.

Equinoa said the vice president's salary will depend on the individual's experience. Interim Vice President Kerry Yamada estimated that the incoming vice president would earn between $90,000 and $100,000 per year.

The job deals with all aspects of campus life outside of academics, such as health and career services.

"This is a vital position for the campus," Equinoa said. "It is a very key leadership position. The position level has high impact potential. It makes a significant impact on campus environment and all of the university community."

ASI President Marquam Piros emphasized that the position is ASI's direct link to President Warren Baker.

"That is our main conduit to the university president," Piros said. "It is our liaison and our advocate. It is a very key position for ASI and the general student body."

The position was vacated last August when Hazel Scott left to assume a similar post at Occidental College in Los Angeles.

Yamada has assumed the duties until a new vice president is hired. Because he plans to retire, Yamada did not apply for the position.

Yamada said the job is hectic, but well worth the effort.

"It is a very challenging experience," he said. "But the most enjoyable part is to work with the students. Working with ASI has been a stimulating experience for me."

Piros said he currently meets with Yamada on a weekly basis, but in the future the meetings will be at the discretion of the vice president.

"I keep him informed on any hot issues, like the Children's Center and Open House," Piros said. "We talk about budgets, policies and procedures."

Interim ASI Executive Director Polly Harrigan — who oversees the day-to-day operations of ASI — describes the relationship between ASI and the vice-president as critical.

"ASI has a two-way (correspondence) relationship with the vice president for student affairs," Harrigan said. "It is an absolutely critical position because it is our chance to speak on behalf of student issues at a managerial position."

Student Life and Activities is another student organization that reports directly to the vice president for student affairs. Student Life Assistant Director Bob Walters said it is absolutely necessary that the candidates be in touch with the student body.

The remaining open forum is scheduled for next Tuesday.

AQUARIUM: A concept which could benefit both students and tourists

Beach public in addition to its educational research use.

Cal Poly is working with Shell Beach because the university needs more support and the community needs more tourists, said adjunct professor of biology Richard Orkand.

Orkand said the aquarium will complement and expand existing programs at Cal Poly, including marine biology and aquaculture.

"It will increase the educational offerings at Cal Poly," he said.

Orkand said the aquarium proposal also will provide public educational programs for K-14 schools and the community.

The proposed development plan would immediately benefit the local construction industry by providing employment during the construction phases, Orkand said. These benefits will extend to the coastal cities of Oceano, Pismo Beach, Grover Beach and Morro Bay.

The project also will benefit Cal Poly through expanded educational and research programs and private funding for research grants and contracts, Orkand said. If the project is successful it could serve as a model for other small communities, whose economies are linked to nearby universities, he added.

Holland said he and the group are hoping something good comes out of the project, which is only in the beginning stages.

Rosemary Bowker, an instructional computing consultant in the biological sciences department, also is working on the project. She said there are no guarantees that the proposal will go through.

"It isn't anything that is in effect," Bowker said. "We are still looking into it."

Cal Poly's money is back in South Africa.

Is politics there soon?

By Lisa M. Hansen
Daily Staff Writer

Cal Poly has joined the ranks of major international firms who have once again begun to reinvest in South Africa — a country that has suffered more than 10,000 political deaths since 1990.

And while the country prepares for its first-ever inter-racial elections scheduled to take place in just over a month, those investments may prove to pull South Africa out of a 10-year economic disaster.

Cal Poly implemented a ban on at least two companies eight years ago after they violated the investment policy of the Foundation Board of Directors. Wentworth, Hauser & Violich, and Kaspick & Co., which manage equity holdings and mutual funds for the Foundation, were continually screened for socially responsible investing, according to Trust and Investment Administrator Kandy Hart.

"Based on the activity in South Africa then, the student body and President Warren Baker requested that the Foundation not do business with companies supporting companies in South Africa," she said.

For nearly 10 years, South Africa has been a land shredded by ethnic violence and plagued with political upheaval. Nelson Mandela, now president of the African National Congress and a candidate for South Africa president, was released from prison in 1991 — seriously ill, but ready to put the country back on its feet. During this time, South Africa began establishing itself as a democratic nation. Apartheid was abolished, South Africa participated in the Olympics and Mandela and South Africa President F. W. de Klerk united in effort to bring the two colors of South Africa to understand each other.

In September 1993, citing these improved conditions of his country, Mandela asked the United Nations to lift the trade sanctions against South Africa. The Foundation soon followed the lead of the UN General Assembly in October when it complied with Mandela's request and adopted a resolution ending most of its economic sanctions.

Cal Poly history professor Nancy Clark received her doctorate in South Africa Studies from Yale, spent a year
