Powerhouse: Coffee talk heating up

By Julie Staszny
Daily Staff Writer

A hot cup of cappuccino may become a little easier to find on the west side of campus if five home economics seniors have their way.

Kimberly Bowen, Erica Wong, Marla Bube, Erin Aspinall and Wendy Fleischer are attempting to convert the historic Powerhouse into a coffee house as part of their senior design series.

The proposed plan consists of a sit-down cafe serving coffee and bakery goods equipped with a study room and a conference room for faculty and students.

"It would be on the upscale level," Bowen said.

The students got the idea from an article printed last year detailing three architecture students' senior projects. The project consisted of putting the Powerhouse on the National Historic Registry and a student survey citing the best use for the Powerhouse as a cafe or museum.

"It was really exciting for us to (try to) preserve the oldest building on campus," Bowen said.

According to Bowen, the location is prime since there is no food service location to serve the needs of students and faculty on the west end of campus near the stadium.

Politics of despair have SLO Mexicans disillusioned

By Kathleen Lux
Daily Staff Writer

The assassination of the man who was expected to become the next president of Mexico has sent shockwaves far beyond the Mexican border.

Luis Donaldo Colosio, the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) candidate, was gunned down last week in Tijuana. Emotions continue to run high in a country that has seen much turmoil during the past few months. Those sentiments have touched Cal Poly's native Mexican population as well.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Pedro Arroyo, a political science junior and former president of Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan (MEChA), said he felt sorrow over Colosio's assassination. Arroyo was born and raised in Mexicali, Mexico.

However, he said the assassination could have a positive fallout.

"(It could be a) blessing in disguise if the August elections could function in a more democratic sense," Arroyo said. "Then his death will not be in vain."

Colosio, who was appointed by Mexico's current president, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, was the inevitable winner of the next presidential elections, according to observers. The elections are scheduled for

Response time due to fire station's closure to be addressed next week

In fall quarter, emergency response meant flashing blue lights glittering off a shattered windshield. Now, it's six committee members calmly discussing Public Safety's performance and coordinating a survey of campus opinion.

The committee is based on a Total Quality Management program that is implemented in several other campus organizations. The survey probing campus opinion on Public Safety's emergency response performance will be conducted next week.

Formed at the close of fall quarter — and in the wake of the fire department's closure and a heated debate over emergency response times — the committee is hoping to measure student concerns about Public Safety's performance, Interim Police Chief Steve Schroeder said Thursday.

Environmental engineering freshman Jennifer Bitting, is a member of the committee, which hopes to release a survey sometime next week.

Bitting said she is the first student to be included on a panel like this, and Schroeder agreed it was unusual.

"It is (rare)," he said. "The reason I pushed for her involvement is that she had been one of the coauthors of a petition (during fall quarter to improve emergency response). She's been real consistent in showing up and she's been really enthusiastic."

A petition coauthored by Bitting and industrial engineering freshman Rob Connelly in fall sparked a heated round of debate involving students, ASI and Public Safety.

Wilson, Huffington are trailing in voter polls

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Gov. Pete Wilson is creeping closer to Kathleen Brown and John Garamendi in the governor's race, but he would still lose to either if the election were held today, a Los Angeles Times Poll shows.

Also among the poll's findings, Democratic Sen. Dianne Feinstein is the favorite by a wide margin over Republican foes Rep. Michael Huffington, R-Santa Barbara, and former Rep. William Dannemeyer, R-Fullerton.

The Times Poll showed 76 percent of those surveyed said they didn't know enough about Huffington to judge him, despite more than $1 million he has poured into television advertising this spring.

Sixty-three percent of voters said they had a favorable impression of first-term senator Feinstein. By a 52 percent to 24 percent margin, Californians approved of the way she was doing her job.

In a hypothetical contest, Feinstein beat Huffington by a margin of 58 percent to 28 percent. She bested Dannemeyer 56 percent to 30 percent.

Dow up for first time in 5 days; sellers keep market jittery

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stock sellers overwhelmed buyers for the sixth straight day Thursday, setting off new jitters among ordinary American investors watching nest eggs shrivel for the first time in more than three years.

The Dow Jones industrial average snapped a five-day losing streak and finished marginally higher. Most broader indicators of the stock market's strength fell, and falling stocks outnumbered gains by 2-to-1 in heavy trading.

The descent of the market attracted prominent White House attention for the first time. President Clinton said the economy is sound.

The erosion in stock valuations since the market's peak two months ago has raised levels of anxiety about the life of a rally that has lasted 3 1/2 years.

POLL: Both democratic hopefuls would beat Wilson badly if elections were today

In a hypothetical matchup for the governor position, state Treasurer Brown would defeat Wilson 51 percent to 41 percent, a smaller margin than the 49 percent to 34 percent in an October Times Poll, according to the latest survey published Thursday.

Garamendi would beat Wilson by a 47 percent to 42 percent margin, down from October's 49 percent to 31 percent, the poll showed.

The poll found that the governor got a boost from his recent emphasis on the issue of crime.

The Times Poll surveyed 1,608 Californians — 1,211 of them registered voters — between March 26 and 29. The margin of error overall was 3 percent in either direction. Among Democrats or Republicans exclusively, it was 5 points.

In the Democratic primary June 7, the race was substantially unchanged with Brown continuing to run well ahead of Garamendi, defeating him 39 percent to 25 percent.

State Sen. Tom Hayden, D-Santa Monica, the third well-known candidate in the governor's race, got just 8 percent. Hayden was also the only Democrat losing to Wilson, 55 percent to 33 percent.

MEXICO: Local countrymen say Colosio's killing loss of great hope for nation

Aug. 21, 1994.

Cal Poly Spanish professor Guillermo Martinez, a Mexican native, expressed admiration for the deceased.

"He was a new breed of politician," he said. "It was politics by choice, not by force. He proposed positive changes."

"When Colosio was first nominated, I was surprised the party nominated (him)." He was a great nomination. His rise was no surprise to the people."

Martinez said he could personally relate to the 44-year-old candidate in terms of age and generation. And, he said, he felt Colosio was in touch with "the common man."

"He seemed irreplaceable," he said.

Mario Aburto Martinez, 23, of Tijuana, was arrested at the scene in connection with the murder. Martinez is a former Southern California resident reputed to have gang ties, according to news reports. He confessed to the killing Wednesday, proclaiming: "I did it for Mexico."

Arroyo said he feels recent speculation of a conspiracy to kill Colosio's death is false.

"I feel Mario Martinez acted alone and it is unclear as to why he did it," he said.

But other Cal Poly students hold different opinions.

Animal science senior Javier Naranjo, of Michoacan, Mexico, and agriculture freshman Aaron Limón both said they subscribed to the conspiracy theory and felt the assassination would tarnish their country.

"This is going to effect Mexico because with the free trade (NAFTA), Mexico was trying to present that Mexico as a safe place," Naranjo said. "This will effect people who might want to invest in Mexico. It will cause a lot of economic and social problems.

"It's very embarrassing how he was killed," he added. "Before that, everything was looking better."

Students from Tijuana expressed shock over the incident.

Civil engineering senior Yolanda Calvo was in Tijuana for spring break on the day of the shooting.

"I felt really disappointed," she said. "I thought things were really changing. It was a disappointment ... it seemed uncivilized. You really can't believe it happened."

Limón also was in Tijuana the day of the assassination. "I thought (my friends) were joking when they told me Colosio was shot," he said.

Calvo said Mexicans fear the assassination will hurt Mexico's already troubled economy.

"The concern of the citizens is the economic stability," she said. "No one will invest."

"This leaves a dark blemish on Tijuana," Guillermo Martinez said.

But Arroyo disagreed.

"There's such a market down there," he said. "This will not effect U.S. investment. Mexico is a new frontier, there is so much buying power that the possibilities are endless."

Colosio's replacement, Ernesto Zedillo — who was nominated Wednesday — was the former candidate's campaign manager and Mexico's education minister, according to reports.

But those interviewed were unfamiliar with the new candidate. Arroyo, Naranjo, Limón and Calvo all said they don't know much about Zedillo.

"The choice seemed forced," Martinez said.

POWERHOUSE: Building may house Poly café

Although response Psychological Services secretaries Pat Stout and Dorothy Tomilson are concerned about the noise construction would cause, they are in favor of the completed project.

"It would be nice because there isn't any (food service) down in this area," Stout said.

The rustic Powerhouse is the last remaining original campus building. It was opened in 1908 to supply electricity and steam heat.

But the building was closed in 1955 when the city began bringing in new power sources. It was later reopened in 1967 as a lab for architecture and environmental design students. In 1990, the Powerhouse was condemned.

According to ASI Operations Director John Stipicevich, the building's place on the National Historic Registry gives potential for the state to match funds put up by the school to begin the project.

"(In that case,) ASI will lead the way to put up funds for the project," Stipicevich said.

According to Bowen, funds may be raised by soliciting donations from alumni and members of the community, in addition to other fund-raising activities.

"We don't want to raise student fees if we can help it," Stipicevich said. "A temporary raise (in fees) is a possibility."

Stipicevich explained that student fees would be needed for renovation because the Powerhouse building would be run by ASI, much like the Rec Center and University Union. Food service, however, would be contracted out to the Foundation, as are Julian's and Backstage Pizza.

"I don't think (ASI) would be the only means of fund raising, but if we didn't get (ASI funds), it would really put a wrench in things," she said.

If all goes as planned, fund raising will begin in September with construction beginning one year later, according to Bowen. A tentative completion date has been set for 1997.

Architecture seniors Eric Elmer, Doug Davis and Harvey Flesey will take over the project next year, working on the structural and interior design.

"After graduation I hope to follow the project," Fleischer said. "It's become a part of (me)."

SURVEY: Students will say how they feel about Poly emergency care

response to cold water in the Rec Center pool and an early October head-on collision on Grand Avenue in front of the dorms spurred the students to action, Biting and Connelly said at the time.

The survey to be distributed next week probes students' feelings on the adequacy of emergency care available on the Cal Poly campus. It also asks students to prioritize their concerns, rating the importance of staffing on-campus emergency medical technicians, additional police officers, an ambulance stationed on campus and longer hours of Health Center operation.

The survey will be distributed to dorm residents and staff and faculty, Schroeder said.

He said in order to get response from the campus as a whole, Public Safety will also be buying space in Mustang Daily to print a copy of the survey.

"We're hoping for a 25 to 50 percent return response on these," he said. "If we get within that area, we're going to have some very good (verifiable) information."

Schroeder said the survey is

"It's essentially brainstorming on the customer level that helps determine how to best serve the client. In this case, our client is the college community."

"Using the results of the survey will allow us to take whatever recommendations that the students make and factor in what is feasible."

Scott Pearl
Public Safety Officer

part of a routine attempt to monitor customer satisfaction. He said before making any changes to improve emergency response, the committee wants to be sure people on campus feel a need for those changes.

"The goal is to improve customer service ... so that they can have some input into maybe changes and improvements," Schroeder said.

Several committee members said the results of the survey will be used to consider changes in Public Safety.

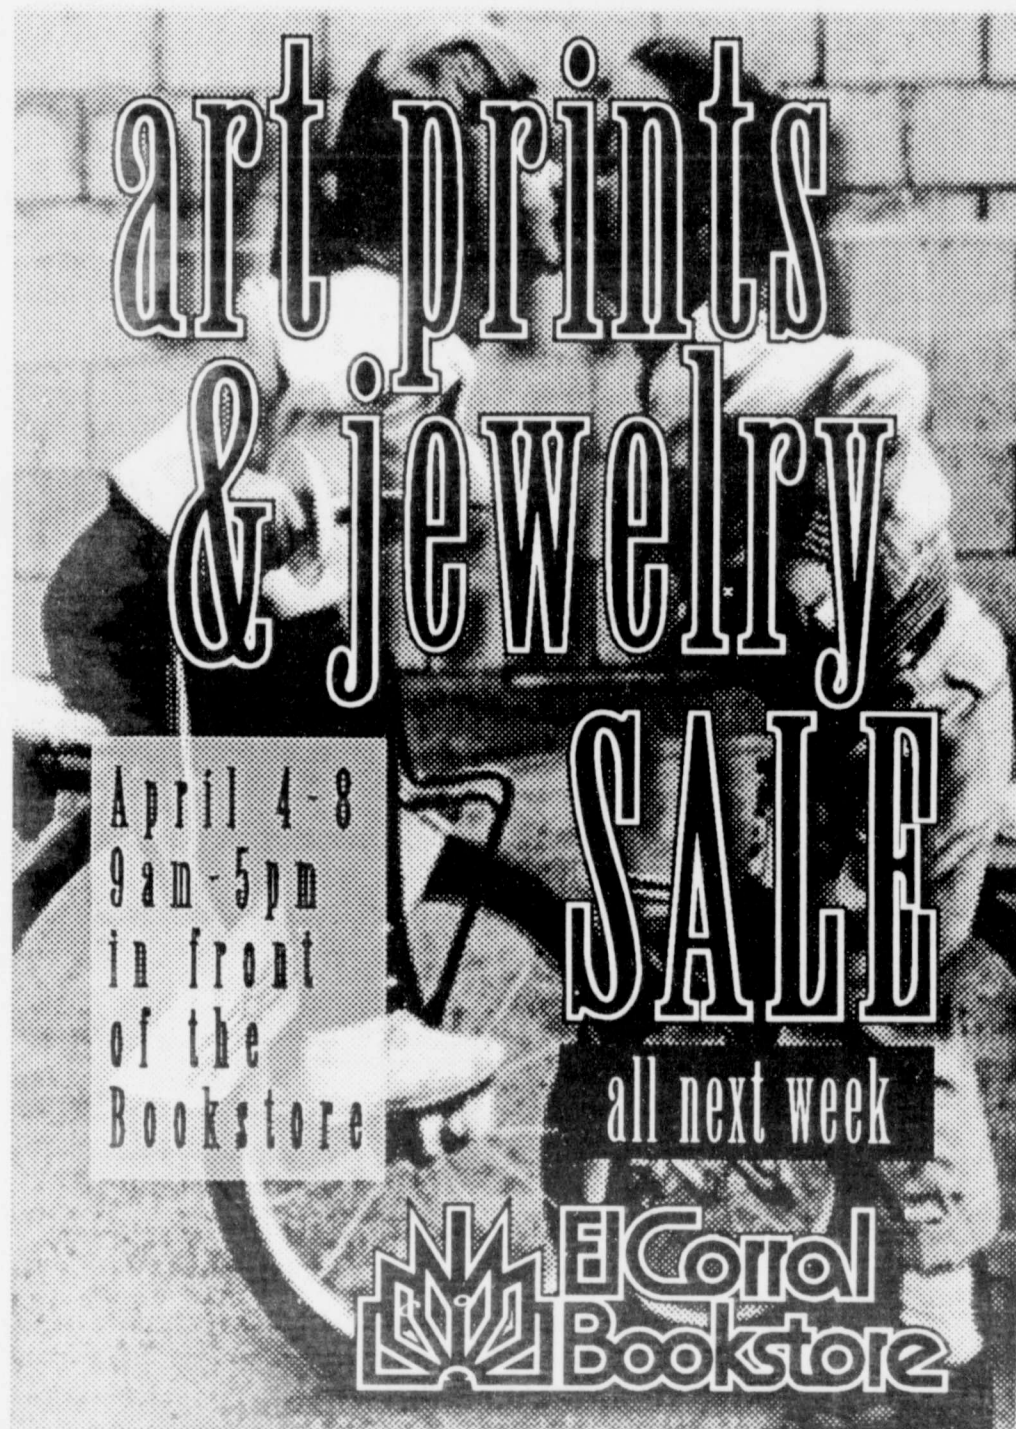

"We're putting the survey out with the intent of getting realistic feedback," said Scott Pearl, a Public Safety officer and committee member.

According to Schroeder, the petition to be circulated to the dorms is modified to include a question that asks students if they would be willing to accept a fee hike of $10 or less in exchange for better service.

The Total Quality Management program was originally a business tool which measured the level of product acceptance and consumer response. TQM frequently uses surveys to determine those results.

"It's essentially brainstorming on the customer level that helps determine how to best serve the client," Pearl said. "In this case our client is the college community."

"Using the results of the survey will allow us to take whatever recommendations that the students make and factor in what is feasible in order to come up with a balanced solution."

They make life special

It's times like these when I feel really stupid for rushing around, stressing out and worrying about things like grades.

It's times like these when I have to sit and think about what's really important: The people who make my life special.

In the past two months, four people I know have died. Two of them I knew only briefly and two were very close to my heart, but the feeling of loss is there.

The grieving process is a long one. First you feel the ways that person touched your life and the way you will miss them. Then you grieve for the family and friends they left behind. Then you wonder how in the name of all that is right could this have happened to this person. And hopefully, if you are fortunate, you do not have to chastise yourself for not spending enough time with that person and for never telling them how much you cared.

Here in our little microcosm, we have safe places to sleep and food to eat and the freedom and ability to come and go as we chose. We forget to appreciate things the way we should. But there is no excuse for taking another human being for granted.

I know I have snapped at my mom because she loves me and will forgive me. I know I have been grouchy to my roommates because something else was bugging me, but I never doubted that they would forgive me. But what if I awoke tomorrow and someone I love so much wasn't there anymore — what if I never got the chance to say I was sorry?

Or what if I just never took the time to tell someone that I really admired his talent at drawing or that I thought he was one of the wittiest guys I ever met? What about the next time I go to laugh at an inside joke and no one is there to laugh with me? The people we care about know that we care about them. They know how we feel. But that's not enough.

I've always believed that every person I encounter in my life has something to teach me and I have something to give them in return. It's like exchanging a little piece of yourself with someone — subconsciously. We take it for granted. When I stop and think about the special and unique things I have learned from everyone I care about, I really doubt all those people know what precious gifts they have given me.

So when someone isn't there anymore, they have left you with a piece of themselves.

When someone my age with the same friends and the same goals and dreams isn't there anymore, a part of me is missing. What is left is admiration, because there was so much to admire.

My mind's eye can see how goofy my friend looked in that disco costume and in my head I can perfectly hear his San Luis Obispo disc jockey imitation, "Congraatulations! You've just won HAALF a cheeze sandwich!"

It's times like these that I have to remember studying for a test is not always more important than going out for coffee. And why should I put off calling my grandma until Sunday? And why treat anyone with anything less than love and respect for the simple reason that they will forgive you if you don't?

It's easy to get our priorities screwed up living the lifestyle we do, but that doesn't make it excusable. Think about the people you care about and why you do — and tell them that you care — not out of paranoia, but out of love and respect. And never take life for granted. It's much too fragile.

COMMENTARY

Don't stress: People love to eat

By Russ Livingston

Re: "Swimsuits + great bodies = big bucks," Carolyn Nielsen, 3/9/94

Carolyn Nielsen's column touched on some interesting topics: The pressures women feel to have and maintain a perfect figure and eating disorders. The article used examples of the Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue, and of Playboy magazine to illustrate its point.

This was a good point to cover, however, Nielsen said "from a young age, the media has bombarded (women) with messages that they should be thin." She also mentions the topics of anorexia, bulimia and obesity as a possible result of these cosmetic pressures.

I have two older sisters and fully understand all of the pressures on appearance for women that she mentioned in that article. Nielsen only mentioned the extremes of eating disorders — the opposite ends of the spectrum.

There is a plethora of colors in between. I agree that there are considerably more anorexic, bulimic and obese women than there are men. But, I can assure you, there are an equal — if not greater — number of men with slight to moderate weight problems. Just as women tend to put cheese on their thighs, men can easily acquire a generous sack of water hanging over their belts.

Nielsen said women are "affected more by false images and high expectations." This is also very true, in a sense. This may be true for appearance. Men can definitely get away with more sloppiness in dress code and body shape, but those aren't the only pressures of appearance that are out there.

Men have some pressures that are unique to us. These also start from early on. I can still remember vividly my father telling me that if I didn't finish my plate, I wouldn't grow up to be as big as John Wayne. As a little kid, you only need to hear phrases like that to realize that more means better. If one plate can get me to The-Duke status, where could I get with two, or maybe three plates? I'm sure the last thing a parent would want is an under-nourished male child. Girls can get away with being really skinny, whereas boys can't.

Girls had all the early programming to always be effeminate, causing them now to resort to an eating disorder to stay "thin and pretty." But men had equally strong pressures — to grow, to be strong.

I just wish everybody out there would find out what it is that is really important to them — what they want — and go to it. If having a great body for all to appreciate is what you want, then more power to you. This means for guys and gals — some of my best friends are guys who easily spend more primp time in the bathroom than both of my sisters combined.

For me, being happy is what is important. The thought of having a great body has its novelty. But so do biscuits and gravy, or garlic and cheese bread.

Those out there who, like Nielsen, are feeling pressure: Don't worry. There are plenty of us out there who understand. Sure, the swimsuit issues are fun to look at, but that doesn't mean men expect all women to look like that.

Myself and some other of my not-so-petite friends could never go out with girls in the magazines for the simple reason of annoyance: I would hate to sit across the dinner table from one of them in a restaurant. She would be staring at me after each bite like I had a revolver to my head with the chambers spinning with all but one empty!

Isn't it funny — this whole commentary and all its underlying topics comes down to one thing: People love to eat, plain and simple.

LETTERS

These arms are for freedom, don't take them away

Re: "Each Tom and Harry with a gun is not a well-regulated militia" Letters, 3/9/94

I would like to thank history junior Luc Chamberlin for pointing out the areas of confusion many people have with all that has been going on of late. The Brady Bill was the start of a very strong push to ban all legally-owned firearms.

"President Clinton said he views passage of the Brady Bill as only the beginning of a much broader effort by his Administration to seek sweeping gun control measures ..." (Los Angeles Times 12/5/93).

"If the Jewish families under Hitler's control had been armed, they would have at least been able to try and get out alive."

What would happen if all guns were outlawed and the police collected all the weapons on record? Criminals will have little to fear from their victims. What heavily-armed criminal is going to run away from a man trying to protect his family with a baseball bat?

Banning legal gun sales will only keep lawful citizens from owning guns, not criminals. With all the thousands of tons of illegal drugs shipped into this country, do you really believe guns are any more difficult? The gun ban in England does not seem to have affected the IRA.

I agree with the student who wrote that "Every Tom, Dick and Harry owning a gun is not what I call a well-regulated militia." True, it is not. It is the potential to become a well-regulated militia that secures your freedom. It is difficult to oppress a people if they are all armed.

Our history student says this is not true and then cites an example that proves it is: Mr. Chamberlin stated because handguns and rifles were not collected after World War I Hitler was able to organize bands of rebels and take over an ailing government. Therefore, guns are to blame for World War II. Really?

Germany was carved up after WWI, had to pay 5 billion dollars in reparations and had 6 million unemployed workers. In such a small country you better believe a revolt of a weak government was going to happen.

Yes, the government of a very dissatisfied country could not subdue its armed people. Once in control, Hitler, like Mussolini and Castro, insured that he would never be removed from power by enforcing strict gun control. If the Jewish families under Hitler's control had been armed, they would have at least been able to try and get out alive. Yes, our history junior gave a very good example of the disadvantages of gun control.

I have an idea. Why don't we use our efforts to stop criminals?

Two out of three released criminals will be arrested again within 36 months. More than half are released awaiting trial. Of those, 20 percent escape and 16 percent commit another crime while released. Criminals are the problem, not guns.

Yes, Mr. Chamberlin, we know history repeats itself. We are not only thinking about it; it is also what we are afraid of.

COWBOYS: Two egos too big for Texas

"There's no question it was definitely a case of two guys with huge egos," Patterson said. He added that when Mike Shanahan was fired as Los Angeles Raiders head coach, it was because owner Al Davis was in control.

It's a situation with "a strong-minded, good head coach and an owner who wants control," Patterson said.

Patterson, who begins his reign as head coach this fall, said college athletes have a more difficult adjustment to new coaches than do professionals.

"The difference is — at (the professional) level — it's their livelihood," Patterson said. For college athletes, it's "more difficult, because it's not a profession."

Junior running back Dave Vieler thought Johnson's exit "was bound to happen." Vieler said he didn't feel either Jones or Johnson was responsible but, "I empathize with the players."

Vieler noted when there are coaching changes, it is difficult for players to adjust.

Vieler and all the Mustangs are adjusting to a coaching change of their own after Patterson replaced Lyle Setencich when his contract was not renewed after the 1993 season. "It's tough, but the way we're going about it is in a very encouraging way," Vieler said.

"It kind of made me sick," said computer science senior Jeff Caddel. "They were a team on top of the world with all the components there to be the team of the '90s."

Caddel, a big sports fan, continued, "But with the two biggest egos in sports, it's not going to happen."

As for Jones and Johnson working together, "They kind of deserved each other," Caddel said.

lands University 6-3, UC-Riverside 8-1 and Division I Northern Arizona University 6-3.

"Beating Northern Arizona was a bit of an upset since they are a Division I team," junior Josh Johnston said.

The women's team (11-3 and 4-2 in CCAA) also played four road matches before and over spring break. They blanked Pomona-Pitzer 9-0 Saturday after dead week. The women then started their spring break clip with a tough 2-7 loss to Cal Poly Pomona.

The Mustangs rebounded with two 9-0 shutouts against Redlands University and UC-Riverside.

The men's team is looking forward to hosting the Third Annual Mustang Invitational starting April 1.

"The winner (of the CCAA) receives an automatic bid to the Nationals, and I think that we are a definite favorite," Eppright said.

"At the beginning of the year I would have been happy with a .500 record, but now we are 12-4 and looking to go on to the Nationals," Eppright said.

"Our lower-ranked players have really stepped up this season," he added.

The women's team next match is away against Cal State Los Angeles on April 7.

BASEBALL: Team prepares for rival Pomona

The Broncos are led offensively by senior designated hitter Dave Anderlik, hitting at a .400 clip. Catcher Brian Dennis is close behind at .393 and has tagged 34 runs batted in while lead-off hitter Aaron Edwards leads the CCAA with 28 stolen bases. Vallejo leads the Bronco rotation with five wins.

"The key to the series for us is to keep some of their better base stealers off the pads," Agler said. "And obviously if our pitchers and defense can execute well and keep them off the bases, then we won't have to worry about their runners."

The Mustangs return home Tuesday for a single non-conference game with Westmont at Sinsheimer Park at 2:30 p.m.

During the final weekend of spring break, the Mustangs swept a pair from Cal State San Bernardino on the road and improved their CCAA mark to 5-3. The series opener was scratched because of rain and will be made up during a later Mustang homestand.

Cal Poly shut down the Coyotes 7-2 in the opener, behind two RBI performances from Jon Macalutas and Grant Munger.

Stephens picked up his fourth win of the season with eight innings of work, giving way to Rob Croxall in the ninth.

In the nightcap, the Mustangs blew past San Bernardino 13-2 with Kevin Hannigan closing on the mound for Cal Poly after six solid innings' work from Simone.

Macalutas had three hits in the contest, with Rob Neal knocking in four runs to lead the offensive attack. Kevin Tucker had a pair of hits in each game for the Mustangs.

"We swung the bats well against San Bernardino and we need to continue to do that," Agler said. "We also played the short game a lot better, getting the ball to the right side of the infield and moving players around the bases. If it's a low scoring game, it's going to be the short game that's the key to winning."

In other spring break contests, the Mustangs captured two of three from UC-Riverside and split a pair against Eastern Oregon.

EPPRIGHT: Doing double duty on the court

club. He had an impressive 72-5 record in high school.

He received a scholarship to Santa Clara University where during his three-year tenure he accumulated the highest winning percentage in school history.

His love for the game and the competition led him into coaching at Pomona College where he compiled a 15-6 record in one season.

He said what he enjoys most about coaching is "trying to help (the players) develop into the best student-athletes they possibly can (and) to mold a bunch of individuals into a team."

Sophomore Michelle Berkowitz believes that he has accomplished this.

"We (the tennis players) do a lot together," she said. "We get along well as a team."

One of the things the women's tennis teams did last year was win, both reaching the nationals.

As his most memorable moment in coaching, Eppright cites a 5-4 come-from-behind victory over Abilene Christian College in the women's national semifinals last year.

The Mustangs — down 4-3 — won the final two doubles matches to advance to the championships. "To be down and to have the team battle back ... was real exciting," Eppright said.

Cal Poly eventually lost to UC-Davis 5-1 in the finals.

This weekend, Eppright's men play in the Third Annual Cal Poly Invitational Tournament — a tournament Eppright started his first year here.

Cal Poly won the first two Mustang Invitationals and Eppright likes the team's chances again this year. He expects good competition from tournament participants like St. Mary's College, Claremont-Mudd University and Foothill College — a community college in Palo Alto.

The Mustangs will open the tournament against Claremont-Mudd at 1:30 p.m. Friday. If victorious, the team will play again at 9 a.m. Saturday. A win in that match would put Cal Poly into the finals Sunday at 1:30 p.m.

The other first-round pairings include UC-Riverside vs. UC-Davis, St. Mary's vs. Loyola Marymount and Foothill College vs. Cal Poly Pomona.

(Epp)right for the coaching job

By Matthew Stanley
Daily Staff Writer

Anybody that mistakenly walks into the Cal Poly tennis coach's office rather than the Mott Gym restroom is bound to hold off on venturing on to the bathroom no matter how vital the need may be.

Two shiny four-foot National Championship trophies from his 1986 and 1990 men's teams, bronze plaques and dozens of All-American certificates dominate Head Coach Chris Eppright's office located next door to the gymnasium's main bathroom.

Eppright, one of Cal Poly's most successful coaches, is nearing the end of his third year of coaching at Cal Poly. In his first two seasons, he won the California Collegiate Athletic Association Coach of the Year Award for both the men's and the women's teams. Last year, he also won the West Region Coach of the Year Award.

Eppright attributes these awards to the talent of his players. The teams are indeed playing well again this year. The men's team is 5-0 in conference with one match to go and 12-4 overall. The women's team is 4-2 with two matches to play in conference and 11-3 overall.

The sandy brown-haired, brown-eyed, 26-year-old was also quite a talented player himself. He first picked up a racket when he was nine years old and his parents took him to a tennis clinic at the local

The Cal Poly men's and women's tennis teams didn't have time for a spring break, but their opponents probably wish they had.

Over the break, the men's team won four straight matches and the women's team won three of its four contests, losing only to No. 1-ranked Cal Poly Pomona.

The men's team (12-4 and 5-0 in the California Collegiate Athletic Association) went on a four-day road trip for its break. The men beat Cal Poly Pomona 8-1, Red-

Baseball travels to battle CCAA leader, sister school in Pomona

By Tim Vincent
Daily Staff Writer

Cal Poly's batsmen resume California Collegiate Athletic Association play today, traveling to league-leading Cal Poly Pomona for a crucial three-game series.

The Broncos enter the series atop the CCAA standings with a 5-1 conference record, 20-11 overall and are ranked 24th in the latest Division II polls. The ninth-ranked Mustangs (17-10 overall and 5-3 in CCAA) are tied for third with No. 12-ranked UC-Riverside one game back.

"Pomona's a pretty solid team with a fair amount of returners," said Mustang Interim Head Coach Kent Agler. "The fact that they're leading the conference says something right about the way they're playing ball. We're expecting a typical Pomona vs. San Luis battle."

Shannon Stephens will start on the mound today for the Mustangs. The right-handed junior leads the team with a 5-1 record and a 2.66 earned run average.

Saturday's twinbill pits Brad McKeon and R.J. Simone against the Bronco hitters. McKeon is 2-3 on the year while Simone is 5-2 and leads the team with 34 strikeouts.

our starting rotation," Agler said. "Stephens and Simone are throwing really well right now. Brad (McKeon) missed a couple of opportunities early, but my only concern with him is that he hasn't been on the mound in a couple of weeks."

Countering for the Broncos will be junior Mike Kur-nik today, with Loni Vallejo and Larry Lusk throwing on Saturday.

According to Agler, it's still too early in the season to make too much out of the series with the Broncos.

Agler said the Mustangs are simply treating this series as a normal road trip in a competitive league featuring four nationally ranked teams.

"We've been hitting the ball really well as of late," said Cal Poly Pomona Assistant Coach Steve Osaki.

"The solid part of our game has to be our hitting at this point, but our pitching staff has also been coming around lately. Putting runs on the board early has allowed our pitchers to relax on the mound."

Probe finds no end

The NCAA probe of the baseball program has still not met its end. Athletic Director John McCutcheon and Investigative Chairman Charles Crabb said nothing new has arisen from the ongoing probe.

CCAA teams reach finals

The "streaky" Cal State Bakersfield Roadrunners did it again, repeating as the NCAA Division II Men's Basketball Champions for the second year in a row. Last year the Roadrunners utilized a 33-game win streak (33-0 on the season to win the title) and this year they used a five-game streak to accomplish the same feat.

Cal State Bakersfield defeated Southern Indiana 92-86 in the championship.

Texas shakeup reaches SLO

Dubbed the "snit heard 'round Texas" by The Los Angeles Times, Jimmy Johnson's exit as Dallas Cowboys head coach has raised some local eyebrows.

"I think you've got two big egos and lots of money," said political science professor Joseph Weatherby.

Weatherby, a native Texan, met Cowboy owner Jerry Jones at a party last year. He described Jones as a "very dynamic person and he's very sure of himself."

Weatherby said the two were not liked when they first came to Texas, but noted the locals changed their attitude when the team started winning again.

"When they first came ... everybody thought they were carpet-baggers," he said.

Weatherby feels now that Johnson is gone, outspoken members of the community will be critical of the team. But, Weatherby noted, "If they start winning next year, everybody will be happy."

Johnson replaced Wednesday by three-time championship-winning, former Oklahoma State head coach Barry Switzer, who was Jones' freshman football coach at the University of Arkansas. It is Switzer's debut in the NFL.

Weatherby called Jones the George Steinbrenner of football, but said "people in Dallas will like him if he wins."

Mustang Head Football Coach Andre Patterson said he didn't feel this was the first time ego clashes in the NFL resulted in a coach being fired.
