Peruvian soldiers storm mansion

By Lynn Monahan
Associated Press

LIMA, Peru - In a bloody lightning assault, Peruvian troops stormed the Japanese ambassador's mansion Tuesday, freed dozens of hostages and ended a four-month standoff with leftist guerrillas.

All the rebels - believed to number 15 - were reported killed. President Alberto Fujimori said one captive, Supreme Court Justice Carlos Giusti, and two soldiers also died.

An undetermined number of other hostages were injured in the gunfire and explosions that

Police chief: Largest drug bust in 10 years

San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara sting nabs eight suspects, $160,000 in drugs

By Lenna Chavdarian
Special to the Daily

A six-month investigation by 11 federal, state and local agencies has resulted in what San Luis Obispo Police Chief Jim Gardiner called the largest drug bust in his 10 years on the job.

Eight suspects were arrested Tuesday night on suspicion of possession and conspiracy to sell about $160,000 in methamphetamine, cocaine and marijuana. More than $10,000 was seized, and more than 10 vehicles were confiscated for allegedly transporting narcotics. Five suspects were arrested in San Luis Obispo, while another three were arrested in Santa Barbara.

Suspects Efrain Hernandez, 25, of Santa Maria; Juan Dieguez, 32, of San Luis Obispo and Pismo Beach; Jesus Castro, 23, of Santa Maria; Alberto Alvarez, 24, of Santa Maria; and Carmen Elloqui, 20, of Santa Maria were arrested at the Central Coast Auto Detail on 12 Higuera St. and Castro Automotive at 14 Higuera St., which was allegedly the hub of the drug operation.

The Santa Barbara suspects' names were not available at press time. According to Gardiner, more arrests were expected throughout Tuesday night.

San Luis Obispo County Narcotics Task Force (NTF) prepared for a month for this particular sting. Gardiner said the drug ring

Entzi set to step into presidential shoes

By Mary Hadley
Daily Staff Writer

Her high school principal laughs when telling the story of how Cindy Entzi saved homecoming one year.

The students who were supposed to organize it didn't come through, and at the last minute, Entzi stepped in and put it all together.

"She gets things done," said Kelly Mauch, principal of Lodi High School, where Entzi graduated in 1993. "She ended up organizing the best homecoming we ever had. I don't know how she does it, but she just does it."

Entzi, a political science senior, does a lot. Her latest endeavor is running for ASI president at a time when she could be relaxing and breathing a sigh of relief that Open House is over.

As this year's Open House Committee chairwoman, Entzi began planning the event last May and put in particularly long hours in the weeks leading up to Open House. Now she's focusing her energy on becoming next year's ASI president.

"I feel as if ASI hasn't moved in the right direction this year," Entzi said, "Particularly where the money is concerned."

A member of the ASI Board of Directors for the past two years, Entzi said she disagreed with many of the changes made under ASI's current president, Steve McShane.

Entzi tells of embezzled funds - around $90,000 - that ASI recovered last spring and decided to put into use this fall.

"They said that the money would be offered to student clubs, but that never happened. The Executive Staff came to Finance Committee with a proposal to increase their budget from $9,000 to $25,000. Finance Committee approved an increase to $19,000. So some of that money went to increase the Executive Staff's budget, and there is still some money that's just sitting there," Entzi said.

Juan Gonzalez, Vice President for Student Affairs, was working with ASI during this time.

"ASI discovered in May 1994 that they were victims of embezzlement. In November 1994 there was another embezzlement. Several employees of ASI, not students, were found responsible. We were successful in recouping our loss and a large amount of money came into ASI," Gonzalez said.

"I don't have all the facts to substantiate whether or not all the money was accounted for," he added.

Renovation of Chumash and U.U. up for ASI debate

By Kimberly Kaney
Daily Staff Writer

It can't handle dancing, and it's only 26-years-old. That's why speeches, symposiums and forums are about the only things ever featured in Chumash Auditorium.

"We are unable to hold dances because it is not able to support large rhythmic bouncing motions," said Jason Brooks, the Vice President of Operations on the ASI Board of Directors.

This will all change if the Board of Directors votes to retrofit Chumash Auditorium. The Facility Operations Committee has been researching the student demand for a dance facility on campus. They will present their findings to the board tonight for a vote.

The project consists of steel beams that will be placed inside El Corral bookstore to support and relax the tension in the concrete beams Chumash Auditorium rests on.

"This gives the program board flexibility to schedule smaller concerts for more intimate shows," Brooks said.

This project could be completed as early as this coming fall since El Corral will be closed this summer for renovations. It could be available for a dance during the Week of Welcome, in early fall.

The money for the $80,000 to $120,000 project will come from the Chancellor Office Reserve repair and replacement fund. According to Brooks, ASI puts $68,000 to $100,000 a year into this fund for necessary renovations.

The newest big renovation coming up to vote by the board is a $1.6 million refurbishment project for the University Union.

Banquet honors excellence in engineering

By Monica Phillips
Daily Staff Writer

"My dad never followed what I did in school," said Jenet Alviso, recent mechanical engineering graduate, "and he finally got to see what I've accomplished."

Alviso was just one of four students in the College of Engineering to receive a cash reward for "Outstanding Senior" at the 1997 College of Engineering Annual Awards Banquet Friday, April 18.

The banquet, held at the Embassy Suites Hotel in San Luis Obispo, honored 31 students, two faculty members and two staff members. Students were honored in four different categories including: academic excellence, contributions to the objectives and public image of the College of Engineering, contributions to the objectives and public image of the university, and service to the community. from each category to receive "Outstanding Senior Award," which included a $200 savings bond from Santa Barbara Research.

"The emphasis (of the banquet) is on the students," said Donna Akin, college relations assistant for the College of Engineering.

Ryan Kersting, graduated civil engineering senior received an additional $1,000 savings bond from Santa Barbara Research for his academic excellence. He graduated during winter quarter 1997 with a 3.98 GPA.

Amanda Bailey, industrial and manufacturing engineering senior, and Yazmin Del Refugio Torres, civil engineering senior, also received $200 savings bonds.

Torres said that her greatest reward was to know that she helped with community issues and ASI. She was honored for her service to the community. She has volunteered her time tutoring students for an upward bound program and she supports many environmental issues including "Creek Clean-up Day" sponsored by EcoSLO. She also serves on the board of directors for the College of Engineering and holds several positions in ASI.

Sixteen corporate sponsors were also invited to the banquet, including Thompson Remo Woodbridge (TRW), Litton and Northrup Grumman who presented cash awards to faculty.

Robert Lang, associate professor in the civil and environmental engineering department, was awarded $1,000 for the TRW Excellence and Teaching Award. Professor Art MacCarley, from the electrical engineering department, received both the Litton Excellence in Research and Development Award and the Northrop Grumman Excellence in Teaching and Applied Research

Speaker defending women wins gender superiority debate

By Rachel Brady
Daily Staff Writer

Are men superior to women?

Former teacher Mark Roland and James Ethan Whitt, a Cuesta College student and Denny's waiter, debated this question Monday night before about 60 anxious spectators in the community room of the San Luis Obispo County Library.

Roland's commentary about male superiority has sparked community uproar since it was printed in Mustang Daily, and later on Jan. 9 in New Times. His commentary challenged anyone who disagreed with his statements to defend their arguments in an open debate. Whitt decided to take him up on his offer.

"I responded to the New Times article," Whitt said. "I hate the idea that was presented there and based on the argument he presented, it's easy to win."

The debate, sponsored by Roland, did not include an open forum where audience members could voice their own opinions. The floor was given to both Roland and Whitt for five periods each lasting seven-and-a-half minutes. During this time they were to present facts and rebut anything previously stated by their opponent. At the conclusion, audience members were asked to vote on who made the better argument for their case. This vote was not supposed to reflect their personal belief.

Women won. When the votes were tallied, Whitt had defeated Roland by a score of 49 votes to six. Roland promptly handed Whitt a one hundred dollar bill.

Whitt was pleased with the outcome.

"It was well worth my time," he said. "It was a presentation of facts, not a personal statement."

Roland was happy with the structure of the debate, but didn't feel that the vote had been based on only the facts presented.

"I felt that (the audience) didn't change from their previous feeling," he said. "But to me it was perfect as far as a fair hearing and I accept the judgment of the people."

The debate began with Roland handing out his "points about male superiority," a paper citing academic references about male superiority, which he referred to during his argument.

In his opening statements Roland gave some history behind the debate and stated his argument.

"Men are morally, physically and mentally superior," he said.

"We're in a culture that believes the myth that women are equal to men."

Whitt then stood at the podium and declared an admiration for women and what they have done for society.

"The values that we hold dear, these were created by women," Whitt said. "I have not reached the same conclusion as Mr. Roland and tonight I hope that I can make it clear why I haven't."

Roland rebutted Whitt's argument by claiming that moral values were man's creation.

"The values that we hold dear are male values," he said. "It's wrong to say that since we already believe women have these values, let's continue to believe it."

Roland then cited statistics that said women were the most frequent users of violence in families and assaulted their partners at about the same rate as men.

One such example was that mothers tend to be the "most frequent users of violence in families" at 4.2 percent compared to men's 2.7 percent, which is stated in "Behind Closed Doors" by Murray Strauss.

Whitt was not convinced by Roland's statistics.

"None of what Mark says proves what he's arguing," Whitt said.

Whitt presented a cooperative effort between men and women as a good way to see both of their roles in society. He said that he didn't want to degrade one in order to make the other look better.

"I am not going to male bash in order to make women look better," Whitt said.

Roland was not satisfied with Whitt's cooperative approach to men and women's roles in society.

"We are cooperating, but if I carry 40 pounds and you carry 10, together we are carrying 50. Men are doing more," Roland said.

Roland then went back to his sheet of statistics and finished his moral superiority points by citing that male discrimination is three to four times higher than females.

Roland proceeded to move to points about physical superiority, citing that men have more muscle than women.

"Men are likely to be 40 percent muscle and 15 percent fat; women tend to be 23 percent muscle and 25 percent fat," Roland said, citing "Sexing of the Brain" by Jo Durden-Smith.

"Muscle is what builds the bridges and buildings," Roland said. "Men are doing the work of

Women's studies lunch-time seminar focuses on why it exists

By Rachel Brady
Daily Staff Writer

A panel of graduate and undergraduate students involved in the women's studies program attempted to answer the question "Why Women's Studies?" Monday afternoon.

During the first spring quarter lunch-time seminar held in Staff Dining Room B, panelists discussed personal experiences and future hopes for the Cal Poly women's studies program.

Catherine Reidstra, a graduate student in education counseling and former women's studies minor, began the panel discussion sharing insights about her senior project, which researched the present history of women's studies at Cal Poly. The program has been here since 1991.

"It was the faculty and the students who brought the women's studies program to its present state," she said.

Reidstra also examined why the program wasn't at Cal Poly before 1991. Much of this had to do with faculty and their feelings toward women's studies.

"Many Cal Poly faculty and staff thought that a women's studies program was too radical," she said.

Even now, the women's studies program isn't supported by everyone.

"If you teach a women's studies class at Cal Poly, it's looked at as a point against you when you're looked at for tenure," Reidstra said.

Nancy Castle, a graduate student in psychology-counseling studies program have shown," she said. "(The program) provides a framework for understanding women's issues and life itself."

This insight into her own life brought about positive changes within her husband's life as well.

"Through my growth and his growth, he is a feminist," Castle said. "As I change, I change those around me."

A change of pace came from the next speaker who was the only male member of the panel. Dave Morgan, English graduate student and an ad hoc women's studies advisory boardmember, shared his experiences that transformed him from what he called a sexist, to a women's studies supporter.

Morgan said that he had to learn about all aspects of women's studies before he rid himself of his negative views toward women.

"I was like Scrooge in 'A Christmas Carol.' I was visited by the ghosts of sexism past, sexism present and sexism future," he said. "In order to deal with sexism present, you need to learn about sexism past."

Morgan also said that his classes in women's studies will help him to understand his students better when he becomes an English teacher.

education and a former women's studies minor and member of the women's studies advisory board also spoke at the panel. Castle spoke about the enriched experience that the women's studies program had provided during her time at Cal Poly.

"I felt that I was part of a smaller unit in a large institution," she said. "The women's studies minor and program gave that to me."

Castle also praised the instruction within the program.

Poly volunteers receive President's Award

By Martha Blackwell
Daily Staff Writer

Stepping out onto the sunny, warm courtyard of the Albert B. Smith Alumni Center Monday afternoon, where fresh strawberries, pastries and fruit punch had already set the festive atmosphere, a sense of affability was impossible to avoid.

Fourteen nominated Cal Poly students and eight student groups were recognized Monday at the 12th Annual Cal Poly President's Awards for Outstanding Community Service.

President Baker acknowledged the students by personally presenting the awards, showing his appreciation and awareness about the value that community service instills in an individual.

"It (community service) provides an opportunity for the university, through the students, to reach out to the community and work in harmony with our community," Baker said.

Baker said that he feels community service provides an experience that helps an individual develop through life. He said that volunteering for the community helps to raise the level of enthusiasm for formal education by bringing the outside experiences into the classroom.

The first certificates of appreciation were presented to five graduating seniors, representing five of the six colleges at Cal Poly, who were nominated by their department heads as contributing the most to the off-campus community.

English senior Lorri Sulpizio, who also received a certificate of recognition for the National Organization for Women (NOW) and one of two President's Awards for individual service, was honored by the College of Liberal Arts for her work with youth and women in recovery programs.

Sulpizio said her involvement with community volunteering began her freshman year when she coached a girls' basketball team. She realized that volunteering one's own time is the only way that many underrepresented groups in society can become recognized and feel successful.

The College of Engineering honored civil engineering senior Yazmin Torres for her tutoring of disadvantaged youth through the Upward Bound program.

Torres has always been an active volunteer through numerous clubs at Cal Poly and said, "The people's reactions make volunteering well worth it."

Other senior recognition awards went to, Richard Shaw, from the College of Architecture and Environmental Design; Hannah Kim, from the College of Business; and Megan Mikacich, from the College of Science and Mathematics.

The recipient from the College of Agriculture had not yet been determined at the time of the reception.

Three other awards were presented to outstanding individuals for their participation in community service.

Along with Sulpizio, graphic communications senior Amy

Reid was a recipient of the President's Award of a pen set, which is given to two nominees who show an outstanding record of at least three years of voluntary service to the off-campus community.

Reid, who is the president of Student Community Services (SCS), briefly thanked all those who had supported her and said, "(Volunteering is) not something where you can talk about rewards. It's rewards you can feel."

Social science sophomore Denise Rodriguez also received the gold-plated marble pen set for the Emerging Service Leader's Award, which is awarded to an outstanding student with at least two years until graduation.

Rodriguez, whose focal point is on children of the community, has been involved with Helping Hands, which interacts with the children in low income housing projects.

"It's so important to help children," Rodriguez said. "They need more guidance and role models today than ever."

Three community service groups were also awarded plaques for their active participation.

Receiving the President's Award was the Newman Catholic Club.

The Newman Center, which is located at 1472 Foothill Blvd., has been volunteering in the community for years.

With almost 500 members, the club calculated that it had volunteered close to 5,000 hours of community service last year alone.

The Newman club was specially honored for its outreach program at Atascadero State Hospital, tutoring activities for local elementary students and assistance to the homeless and poor.

Representing the club was Natalie Gibson, an architecture engineering senior and president of the club.

Gibson nominated the club last quarter for the award and took care of the application process herself. After receiving more than 13 letters of support and appreciation from numerous organizations and people, Gibson knew that she had a good chance to win.

"It's just really nice for me to be able to give something back to all the volunteers," Gibson said of the award.

The group recipient of this year's Emerging Service Leader's Award was the VECINO Program.

VECINO, also an acronym for Voter, Education, Citizenship, Immigration, Naturalization, Outreach, means "neighbor" in Spanish.

The program works with individuals throughout the community, helping them with the naturalization process.

The group of 10 full-time volunteers teaches English and U.S. History to a class of about 50 individuals twice a week for free.

The program began last spring quarter and has since

Open House went on, even without Jonny's help

BY JONNY VANDAL

Well, Open House came and went. Good thing too, I was getting a little tired of hearing 17-year-old voices constantly nag "Come on Mom, it's perfect," or "No way Mom, I ain't comin' here."

Anybody want to guess Vandal's theory on what ended up turning the most parents away last weekend? Utilidor? No... they "cleaned" up their act just in time. The tractor pull or the rodeo maybe? No, there were way too many would-be Aggies around. Give up? Ok, here it is: SLO transit. Yes, ladies and gentlemen the most popular event of Open House was actually the "wait and stare" contest happening in every one of our fine cities' bus stops.

It was quite a sight as masses of confused visitors, who were told not to drive, struggled to figure out the weekend bussing schedule and board the alleged "shuttles" to campus. At one point on Saturday about 30 or so Cal Poly visitors had to wait 15 minutes at the downtown stop as two drivers and another city employee struggled to rescue dollar bills from the toll collector box, or whatever the hell you call it.

I'm just glad Open House wasn't canceled. You know, since I didn't pay my share. You see, the Wednesday before the event I got this call from the university. Someone "officially" inviting me to Open House and then cordially asking for a donation to "help put the event on." I guess she thought she had my dad or something. So I gave her a polite: "HEY LADY, HOW ABOUT YOU WAIT UNTIL I GRADUATE AND PAY BACK MY LOANS?"

In other news, SLO's own "champion" of the male gender, Mark Roland, took his last stand down at the city/county library yesterday. Roland debated Cuesta student James Ethan Whitt over the equality of women. It took a couple of hours of debate, a 49-6 defeat and the loss of a Franklin, to make Roland realize he can't change anybody's mind no matter how much he stresses his little "scientific facts." Give me a break Mark, it's not the quantity of sources that counts, it's the quality and the reasonability of the arguments.

To Roland's credit, I don't see why he couldn't be humiliated right here on campus. Instead the speech, philosophy and women's programs had to give him the silence treatment. But you know how this free speech thing works, do it when it makes you look good, otherwise call it "not worth my time."

Until next time, fight sexism and remember: "Vandal for President!"

Our report from England

BY REMI SKLAR

DAILY FOREIGN CORRESPONDENT

Walking through the daffodils in Regent's Park, taking in the London skyline all around me, it hit me for the twentieth time that I was actually going to be living here in England.

It is impossible not to notice all of the cultural differences between the United States and England.

I'm going to share a few of the interesting lifestyle differences and some of the lingo I've picked up so far.

An obvious difference is the language. In the U.K. where men are "blokes," they have the same language, but you would never hear any of the following phrases in California.

A fascinating phrase like "taking the piss" out of someone isn't forcing them to go to the bathroom (or "loo"). It is, however, fooling or joking around with them.

A "dodgy geezer" is a shady or weird person of any age. You could also describe a dark alley or something of poor quality as being a "bit dodgy."

"Pardon me, but can I trouble you for a fag?" is not an extraordinary question in London, but in the United States it might get you some weird looks or into some trouble. In London, it's only a polite request for a cigarette.

You have to learn these little words to avoid confusion. I probably pick up a new phrase every day. It is amazing how being an ocean and eight hours apart can change the meaning of words.

Then there is the pronunciation of words to contend with. The British accent completely alters the tone of the language. I think English people could stand on a street corner shouting out obscenities and still sound proper.

It isn't just the British speech which is more formal, British mannerisms are much more reserved in everyday situations. Riding on the London Underground or "tubes" (the subway) everyone is reading the paper or looking down. Very few people talk to each other. A new British "mate" told me that if someone tries to make a lot of eye contact on the tubes, then he is probably a pervert.

At first the silence is unnerving, but I've adjusted. When groups of Americans are on the tubes or in restaurants here, you can spot their chattering laughing a mile away.

Americans are more overtly friendly to strangers. This is especially apparent in restaurants. When you walk into a restaurant here they hand you a menu and expect you to know exactly what you want. They never check up on you to see if you need anything. You have to ask for everything, including the bill when you are ready to leave. They think they are pestering you if they ask you if you need more coffee. Seem strange?

"I think English people could stand on a street corner shouting out obscenities and still sound proper."

Don't get me wrong; I've seen the English folk have some boisterous fun of their own at the pubs. It just seems they have a more designated unspoken rule for where to have a good time.

I've yet to fully understand British humor. It is a dry wittiness that is sometimes hilarious and sometimes perverse. I love watching British television commercials because they are so funny.

Of course there is not much to choose from because there are only five channels. Maybe this is why teenagers here are forced to take up singing pop music. There are so many young teen pop singers here, like Robbie Williams. Who? Exactly.

Then there are the Spice Girls, who are the current sensation in England. They are huge here with their "I'll tell you what I want, what I really, really want," and their plastic, neon clothing.

I'm not sure how they are going over in the U.S., but in London children mimic them in the streets, girls dress like them in the clubs and guys get in "queque" (line up) to buy concert tickets. They make the news every night. What have the Spice Girls done today?

The Spice Girls have completely saturated the pop culture. I'll tell them what I want, what I really really want: for them and the other wannabe spice bands to disappear. It's not going to happen soon, but luckily the spice fashion is too skimpy to wear outside everyday.

London is a mecca for fashion around the world. Blue jeans and T-shirts are found only on tourists. Londoners dress nicely for everyday life. Women wear black wool coats, tight black slacks and high black shoes. Men are often in suits and sport coats.

Whatever you wear in England, you can't help but admire the gorgeous architecture of the streets and buildings. In the past two weeks I've been to many (maybe too many) Cathedrals of gothic architecture, stood in the dungeon of a medieval castle and gazed in wonder at Stonehenge, a group of rocks positioned in 1800 B.C.

After these experiences I've realized how much more history there is to learn from my time in Europe. I'm absorbing information at a rapid pace and I'm excited to see a lot more. (Hopefully my pictures will come out.)

I love California, but I really, really love living in London. I am grateful and willing to go into debt for this journey. Cheers!

Remi Sklar just couldn't handle being a Mustang Daily staff writer, so she tried to escape to England, but we tracked her down.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Utilidor man strikes

Editor,

As I was walking at the noon hour today along University Drive in front of the Dexter building I was solemnly wondering, for whatever reason, what it must be like to be an Utilidor worker, in the midst of 16,000 university students.

Passing over the new minor detour near the kiosk I wondered no longer as I, or any other member of the student body who wondered the same and was within earshot (NOT a difficult task), was miraculously answered by one overly vocal Utilidor-man who for reasons I am unaware of was condemning the lot of us in general as "stupid," questioning how we "had even gotten this far," and trying to convince his Utilidohorts of the same.

The answer in question: apparently, it sucks.

I was too near to him to avoid taking personal offense and sent a gung-ho "Fuck off!" over my shoulder, somewhat regrettably as I later realized I was uninterested in contributing any fuel to his starving fire. Nor was I aching to be knocked in the head by the Utilidor.

That aside, I would simply request that in the future you would keep your lowly, skewed opinion of Cal Poly students on the side of the orange fence that obviously invalidates your opinion anyway. Save yourself the embarrassment of being chidden in Mustang Daily. Save me the trouble of doing the chiding. You guys ARE the Utilidor. Don't instill it with a bad spirit. Thank you.

Some Vandeleque support from a student

Editor,

In regards to Johnny Vandal's column last week, I would like to affirm to him that yes, Open House is in fact a cult much like Heaven's Gate. In fact, after being involved for two years now, I'm ready to kill myself just to get away from it. Also, I would like to scream eager support for Jonny Vandal as a write-in candidate for ASI president. No more rich kids with no concept of the need for financial aid.

Open season on humans? Hope not

Editor,

I am writing to debunk M. Paul Gery's ridiculous article on animal rights. I have one main point to make, and I'll be brief. Gery contradicts himself by saying that "animals do not survive by rational thought" and then includes humans as animals. I quote: "Do they not realize humans are also animals?" I'm sorry, but if animals survive without rational thought then I am not one and neither are you.

The key difference is that humans do have rational thought and because of that we don't simply "survive" like the lion that Gery compares us to. We can make choices as to how we live, and many people have. Hunting and gathering are no longer a necessary means of survival for our species.

Further, since in Gery's logic humans are animals, and it's just fine to shoot, kill and eat animals, then it follows that humans are fair game too. In fact, let's get all the hunting clubs together and start making payments on a human hunting park. Wouldn't we just be surviving, Paul?

And listen, for everyone out there that hunts animals for fun don't try and rationalize what you are doing as wholesome and natural. You are killing and probably causing suffering. Now I don't necessarily have a problem with that, I just don't like it when people like Gery try and pull some ridiculous, denial-driven theory out of their ass to justify it. You're killing for pleasure...admit it.

INTOXICATING NEWS: ENCOURAGING HEALTHY DRINKING

We, the Alcohol and Other Drugs Team, have a bone to pick with the students of Cal Poly. AOD received no questions for Intoxicating News which means nobody gets the free Ride-On pass. But since we like you, were willing to keep the contest open for another few weeks. Now onto the subject at hand.

Just about everyone knows what is happening in just a week and a half. Yep, the infamous Wildflower! Fun, sun and, of course, drinking. For some, that weekend is a preview for the summer to come and AOD has a few tips to offer. Fun, of any kind, can be had as long as it's done responsibly. If you choose to drink, we have some basic information that will allow your drinking to be just that, RESPONSIBLE.

Know your limit.

Tolerance depends on both your body structure and your past drinking experience. If you don't drink heavily or on a regular basis, don't try to break a year's drinking record in one night. Also, don't try to keep up with your friends who are more experienced with drinking. Drinking is not a contest, so do what your body feels comfortable with.

Space your drinks.

Drinking is not a race. It takes 20 to 30 minutes for an alcoholic drink to hit your system. This is why pounding drinks isn't a good idea. If you begin the night by taking three shots in a row and don't feel anything, you might think you can keep going. But in under a half an hour, your body will begin to feel the effects of the alcohol. Another key point is that it takes approximately one hour for a drink to be processed from your system. Remember: one drink, one hour.

Drink water between your alcoholic drinks.

Alcohol dehydrates the body which is why you are so thirsty the morning after a night of drinking. Drinking water will help reduce that effect. If taken before drinking, salt tablets also help because they keep water trapped in the body. Be careful not to confuse salt tablets with salty foods. Salty and greasy food will not minimize the effects of the alcohol, in fact they just make you thirstier.

Eat before and during your drinking escapade.

Eating may reduce the effects of the alcohol. We are not saying that eating is a cure, but it can help. Food high in carbohydrates, like whole wheat breads and grains, and rich in thiamin, such as liver, are the best for you to eat. This means that a "run to the border" is not a big help.

Avoid carbonated or bubbly beverages while drinking.

These types of drinks help the alcohol absorb into your blood stream more rapidly. Although they may make the alcohol taste better, they will not help in slowing intoxication.

We, the Alcohol and Other Drugs Team, want you to have fun throughout the summer as well as at Wildflower. We also want you to be around to read our next article, so please, party smart.

As said before, our contest for great questions is still open. Drop your alcohol and other drug questions in the Letters to the Editor box in the Mustang Daily office or at the front desk of the Peer Health Network located downstairs from the Health Center. A free Ride-On pass may be yours!

Have fun at Wildflower or wherever you may be spending your weekends!

Rehearing on affirmative action requested, with Clinton support

By Bob Egelko
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO - Civil rights groups, with Clinton administration support, asked a federal appeals court Tuesday to reconsider its ruling upholding Proposition 209, the voter-approved ban on affirmative action based on racial or gender preference.

The April 8 ruling by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals conflicts with Supreme Court decisions striking down state laws that targeted minority programs for hostile treatment, said lawyers from the American Civil Liberties Union and other organizations representing challengers to the initiative.

They also accused a three-judge panel of violating the appeals court's rules by deciding the entire case after being assigned to rule only on whether Proposition 209 could take effect during an interim period. The panel said in its ruling that it had the authority to broaden the scope of its review.

The request for rehearing automatically extends a ban on implementation of the initiative. If reconsideration is denied, Proposition 209 could take effect a week later unless the Supreme Court intervened. There is no deadline for a decision.

In addition to a rehearing before the original panel, opponents asked the entire court to refer the case to an 11-judge panel for a new hearing. A majority vote among the 19 judges eligible to participate - 11 of whom were appointed by Republican presidents - is required to order such a hearing.

Lawyers on both sides of the case have predicted it will end up in the Supreme Court.

President Clinton's Justice Department, which joined the opposition to the measure before the appeals court, also filed arguments in support of a rehearing. Clinton, whose slogan on affirmative action has been "Mend it, don't end it," opposed Proposition 209 during the campaign.

By passing the initiative, "California has effectively limited the access of minorities and women - the primary beneficiaries of affirmative action programs - to the local political process," Justice Department lawyers wrote.

Proposition 209, approved by 54 percent of the voters last November, would prohibit preferences based on race or sex in state and local government employment, education and contracting.

Its enforcement was barred last December by Chief U.S. District Judge Thelton Henderson of San Francisco, who said opponents were likely to prove it unconstitutional.

Henderson said the measure, though neutrally worded, would abolish only programs benefiting minorities and women, while leaving other groups, such as veterans and children of college alumni, free to ask government agencies for preferential treatment.

He relied chiefly on a 1982 Supreme Court ruling overturning a Washington state anti-busing initiative on the grounds that it stopped local school boards from adopting transportation programs that helped minorities while allowing busing for any other reason.

But a three-judge panel of the appeals court disagreed April 8, ruling not only that opponents were not entitled to an injunction against the measure but also that it was clearly constitutional.

The opinion by Judge Diarmuid O'Scannlain said opponents of Proposition 209 were demanding a nonexistent constitutional right to preferential treatment. He said affirmative action programs based on preferences are constitutionally suspect, hurt some while helping others, and can be abolished by a state.

In language reminiscent of some of Henderson's conservative critics, O'Scannlain wrote that "a system which permits one judge to block with the stroke of a pen what 4,736,180 state residents voted to enact as law tests the integrity of our constitutional democracy."

That statement was attacked in Tuesday's rehearing request as "inconsistent with the tradition of Marbury vs. Madison," the 1803 Supreme Court ruling that established the court's authority to decide whether a law was constitutional.

Like the Washington anti-busing law and others overturned by the Supreme Court, Proposition 209 discriminates "by treating racial preferences differently from all other preferences, such as legacy (college) admissions, political favoritism, and geographical preferences," wrote ACLU lawyer Mark Rosenbaum and Evan Caminker, a UCLA law professor.

rocked the compound, including Peru's foreign minister, Francisco Tudela, who a congressman said suffered a broken leg.

In Tokyo, Japan's prime minister called it a "splendid rescue," but also said it was "regrettable" that Peru had not forewarned his government of the surprise, broad-daylight attack.

The 150-man military-police assault team struck at about 3:30 p.m. (1:30 p.m. PDT), pouring through the compound's front gate, then blasting open the mansion's front door. Others attacked from the rear, and a third unit climbed to the rooftop and shepherded hostages down.

It ended quickly. As smoke billowed over the residence, triumphant soldiers hauled down the guerrillas' flag, and ex-hostages and rescuers cheered and jubilantly sang the Peruvian national anthem. A large pool of blood could be seen at the bottom of a stairway.

The operation ended an international ordeal that had transfixed two nations and focused global attention on a little-known leftist guerrilla group, Tupac Amaru, and its demands that jailed comrades be freed in exchange for the captive diplomats and businessmen.

Peruvian and Japanese news media reported all the hostage-holders - including at least two teen-age girls - were dead.

The relatively low casualty toll among hostages was surprising to some. An armed forces assessment early in the 126-day siege estimated such an assault would cost the lives of 70 percent of those in the compound.

The hostages, all male, were mostly Peruvians, but also included 24 Japanese - 12 businessmen and 12 diplomats, including Japan's ambassador, Morihiro Aoki, who suffered a slight elbow injury during the rescue. There were no Americans among the hostages.

Less than an hour after the raid, Fujimori strapped on a bulletproof vest and victoriously entered the compound. He shook ex-hostages' hands and joined with them and soldiers in singing the national anthem.

Smiling and carrying a large red-and-white Peruvian flag, Fujimori traveled with two busloads of hostages, apparently unharmed, to a military hospital.

From inside the buses, the freed men gave the thumbs-up sign and smiled.

Other hostages were rushed off in ambulances. Friends and family gathered at the nearby hospital to look for loved ones.

"We're here to applaud the hostages and police for their bravery," said one woman at the hospital, Edith Gonzalez. "There was no other alternative but to attack."

But the sister of one hostage said she wasn't sure.

"I don't know if the attack was necessary," said Nancy Dominguez, 53. "All I know is it was a horrible shame."

In Tokyo, Japanese Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto said Peru had not told him in advance of the raid, even though the compound is technically Japanese soil.

"Our country was not informed in advance and this is very regrettable," he said. But he expressed support for Peru's leader, saying, "There should be nobody who could criticize Mr. Fujimori for his decision."

Hashimoto said all the Japanese hostages were safe, but some were slightly injured. He also expressed regrets for "several people who are injured or lost their lives."

Talks to peacefully end the crisis broke down March 12 over the rebels' demand that Peru free their jailed comrades. Fujimori repeatedly ruled that out.

Fujimori had said he would use force to end the crisis only as a last resort, but Peruvian news media repeatedly reported military plans to raid the compound.

The heavily armed guerrillas stormed the residence on Dec. 17 during a cocktail party marking the Japanese emperor's birthday and took almost 500 hostages. They quickly released most of them.

Rebels had warned they had heavily mined the compound to prevent an assault, and staged drills earlier this month to prepare for raids.

The hostage crisis had sparked a political crisis in Peru, and Peru's interior minister and national police chief stepped down over the weekend to accept blame for security lapses that allowed the takeover.

Whitewater prosecutors: Illicit resistance seen

By James Jefferson
Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. - In a strongly worded declaration, Whitewater prosecutors told a judge Tuesday they've gathered "extensive evidence" of possible obstruction of justice, including witness tampering, perjury and document destruction.

The judge granted a six-month extension of the grand jury that prosecutors have been using to investigate President and Mrs. Clinton's roles in Whitewater.

In requesting the extension, prosecutor Kenneth Starr's office also disclosed the existence of behind-the-scenes court battles at which witnesses are resisting providing evidence or testimony.

"There have been assertions of privileges ... which have been or will be the subject of additional grand jury litigation," deputy independent counsel Hickman Ewing wrote in court papers.

"There have been efforts by some persons and entities to challenge grand jury subpoenas," the court papers added. "This has led to grand jury litigation under seal, some of which is ongoing."

The papers did not specify whether witnesses are refusing to turn over documents, are declining to answer investigators' questions or both.

The prosecutors also did not disclose whether the "privileges" involved the president invoking executive privilege or perhaps attorney-client privilege to shield himself from questions or to protect the confidentiality of papers that investigators are seeking.

The Clintons' Whitewater lawyer, David Kendall, declined to comment on the court papers filed by prosecutors.

U.S. District Judge Susan Webber Wright approved the extension to Nov. 7 after prosecutors said the grand jury has gathered "extensive evidence" of "possible obstruction of justice." The grand jury had been set to expire by May 7.

If the grand jury were disbanded, said the prosecutors' court papers, it would impede and further delay the probe of possible "concealment and destruction of evidence and intimidation of witnesses."

Prosecutors are looking into:

-Payments to Whitewater witness Webster Hubbell arranged by longtime friends of the president. The investigation centers on whether the payments were designed to discourage Hubbell, a longtime friend of the Clintons, from giving prosecutors information about the president and first lady.

-Whether the president lied in sworn testimony last year when he denied any knowledge of a fraudulent $300,000 federally backed loan to Susan McDougal, one of the Clintons' partners in the Whitewater real estate venture. Part of the loan was used to prop up the failing venture, and the $300,000 was never repaid. Mrs. McDougal refused to testify to the Whitewater grand jury and is jailed for contempt of court.

Bobby McDaniel of Jonesboro, a lawyer for Mrs. McDougal, said Tuesday the grand jury extension would not change his client's position.

"My reaction is that Mr. Starr just doesn't get it. Susan McDougal is being held in the most awful conditions in solitary confinement, essentially, and she's not going to cooperate with Mr. Starr and the (extension) of the grand jury will not change that," McDaniel said.

-The disappearance and mysterious reappearance of Mrs. Clinton's law firm billing records outlining her work for James McDougal's failing savings and loan in Arkansas. The records vanished and turned up in the White House more than two years after investigators subpoenaed them.

Hubbell "knows where the bodies are buried" and holds the answers to many of the prosecutors' questions, James McDougal said Monday night on CNN's "Larry King Live." Hubbell and Mrs. Clinton were partners in the Rose Law Firm, which represented McDougal's savings and loan.

McDougal has been cooperating with prosecutors since last Aug. 8.

stretches throughout San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara counties.

He said there were 50 officers in San Luis Obispo and 50 officers in Santa Barbara. According to a press release, undercover NTF agents purchased large quantities from the organization.

At approximately 2 p.m. Tuesday afternoon Gardiner said the NTF purchased three pounds of methamphetamine. Shortly after, they served the search warrants in nine locations, four in San Luis Obispo, including the two locations on Higuera Street.

"It was an excellent investigation," Gardiner said. "There was no resistance, no one was injured and we have apprehended the appropriate suspects."

Customers who tried to obtain their cars from the auto shops were turned away as search dogs and police officers from various agencies searched the building, cars and surrounding area to confiscate additional narcotics.

The agencies assisting the NTF in the investigation included the Federal Bureau of Investigation, U.S. Customs, the Drug Enforcement Administration, California Highway Patrol, the San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara Counties' sheriff's departments, and local police departments.

Low reserves keeping gas prices high

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO - Although the national average gasoline price fell for the third consecutive month, prices at California pumps have jumped in the past five months to as much as 12 cents in some cases.

San Francisco, Santa Cruz and Fresno have seen the sharpest increases, according to a California State Automobile Association survey.

Since March 17, for example, the average price of a gallon of self-serve unleaded gasoline in San Francisco has increased 12 cents to $1.52.

The survey also found that the price of a gallon of self-serve unleaded was up 11 cents a gallon in Monterey. The price was up 10 cents in Concord, 9 cents in San Jose and San Mateo, and 8 cents in Oakland and Sacramento.

Meanwhile, the national average price fell for the third consecutive month, and at $1.25 has reached its lowest level since last August.

Although the price of crude oil has been declining - largely explaining the national decline in pump price - supply-and-demand and other economic factors have caused increases in California, analysts said.

So if California refineries are producing 962,000 barrels of gasoline per day, what's going on?

"As everyone will tell you, California in so many things, especially gasoline prices, is a world unto itself," Mike Morrissey, a price specialist at AAA headquarters in Heathrow, Fla., said Monday.

Currently, there are about 4 million barrels in storage in California, compared with 4.2 million this time last year, said Bob Aldrich, a spokesman for the California Energy Commission.

At this time of year, refineries also are changing their products - for example, switching from diesel production to gasoline. That means, in the down time, the transition also causes supplies to drop.

Aldrich and other analysts don't expect to see a price decline at the pump of more than a penny or so between now and the beginning of the summer peak driving season.

In Washington, the U.S. Energy Information Administration predicted that despite anticipated record demand for gasoline, lower crude oil prices would prevent a repeat of last year's surge in pump prices.

Citadel cadets get daylong dose of sensitivity training

By Bruce Smith
Associated Press

CHARLESTON, S.C. - The Citadel canceled classes Tuesday so its 1,700 cadets could learn how to get along with the women among them, everything from avoiding demeaning language to not barging in on their barracks doors.

"Diversity Awareness Day," sensitivity training on the importance of women, was ordered as the formerly all-male military college reels from allegations that two female cadets left because they were hazed and harassed.

"It's no longer that men are the bosses and the women follow orders," said Faye Crosby, a professor at all-female Smith College in Northampton, Mass. "You need to learn how to work with people who don't look exactly like you."

Classes were canceled and gray-uniformed cadets marched to the school's field house for the daylong training, beginning with lectures on gender awareness.

Sandra Thomas, the president of all-female Converse College in Spartanburg, said boys learn to be competitive while girls learn to be nurturing.

"Women must understand the culture of men, and men must understand the culture of women," she said.

But as the day wore on, such vast concepts were boiled down to concrete questions: Should female cadets wear skirts? Should sunbathing be allowed outside the barracks?

And should there be latches on barracks doors?

"Oh yes, absolutely," said Petra Lovetinska, one of two remaining female cadets at the college. "I had several people just walk in without knocking."

The Citadel dropped a bitter court fight to stay all-male and enrolled four female cadets in August after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled a similar all-male policy at Virginia Military Institute was unconstitutional.

Two of the women, Jeanie Mentavlos and Kim Messer, left after the first semester, alleging among other things that male cadets forced them to drink alcohol and set their clothes on fire.

The school has disciplined 14 male cadets and state officials and the FBI are still investigating possible criminal violations.

Senior cadet Sean McBride said he thought the sessions would help.

"We need to stop worrying about being the last class" of men, he said. "We have this old corps group that wants to live in the past. We need to be looking at the fact we're the first and be proud of it."

Thirty-five women have been accepted for this fall's freshman class, and 12 have already indicated they will attend. As many as five upperclass female cadets from Texas A&M may also be on campus in the fall as exchange students.

Bombing trial jury seated; backgrounds and identities unknown

By Michael Fleeman
Associated Press

DENVER - Seven men and five women were selected Tuesday to hear the Oklahoma City bombing trial, with the judge using a bingo-style system of numbers to shield the identities of the already anonymous jurors.

"I now address you as members of the jury," U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch told them as they took their assigned seats in the jury box. "You've been selected as the jury to try this case."

Although their names, backgrounds, attitudes and races were not disclosed, sources close to the case said the jury consisted of seven men and five women, with an alternate panel of three men and three women.

A sloping wall keeps most reporters from seeing into the jury box, but members of the public have a better view. Audience members said the panel appeared to have 16 whites and two whose race could not be determined, but who appeared to be either Hispanic or American Indian.

Those jurors who could be seen by reporters included an elderly white man who leaned over and stared at reporters; a young white man with glasses; a young white woman with curly blonde hair; a white balding man with a mustache; a man with long dark hair who appeared to be an American Indian and a white young man with a beard.

Jurors return Thursday to take their oath and hear opening statements as Timothy McVeigh stands trial in the worst act of terrorism on U.S. soil.

The 28-year-old Gulf War veteran is charged in the the April 19, 1995, truck bombing of the downtown Oklahoma City federal building that killed 168 people and injured hundreds more. He could face the death penalty if convicted.

Outside of court, McVeigh lawyer Stephen Jones said: "We're ready to go." Prosecutors declined comment.

Intent on preserving jurors' privacy, Matsch concocted an unusual system of exercising peremptory challenges, in which jurors were identified by a letter and a number.

Lawyers called out the codes - D-2, A-4, E-6 and the like - of the jurors to be dismissed. In peremptory challenges, no reason must be stated to excuse a juror. The process took about a half hour.

Prosecutor Joseph Hartzler tried to make light of the system.

"Like bingo, your honor," Hartzler quipped.

"There is no way to do this with the current money; it would have to be a part of the fee increase," Brooks said.

The plan, still at the infant stage with a budget, calls for a overhaul of the interior and exterior design to remodel the University Union and bring it into the next century.

"We are redoing the 1971 image it has," Brooks said.

The plan encompasses eight elements: 1) Chumash Auditorium, 2) the outdoor plaza, 3) signage, 4) the lobby and lounge area furniture, 5) conference rooms, 6) office furniture and work stations, 7) wall finished in the upper level lobby areas and 8) new interior construction.

Refurbishing Chumash could include a new sound system, new drapes, clouds at the ceiling and additional updated audio and video equipment.

Have you ever wanted trees in the U.U. plaza? Well your wish could come true. Along with new concrete, new steps, more lighting, benches and an information kiosk, trees for the outside plaza are in the plan.

The plan also calls for new signs inside and outside of the building to replace the old ones that exist now.

Part four of the project includes replacing all the furniture in the lounges and the lobby areas. Additional study tables will also be added.

The uncomfortable orange and green chairs that fill the conference rooms will be replaced. Office furniture and work stations will also be updated.

Have you ever noticed the dark stained line stretching across the wall in the upper lobby area where people rest their heads? The plan is to get rid of that by replacing the wood paneling or even some other alternative.

The most expensive area of renovations is in the final part. Plans include moving the ASI office, redoing the entry into the lower level restrooms and changing the lower level hall and entry into the game area. The most

Willie Williams gets $375,000 taxpayer 'golden handshake' to leave

By Jeff Wilson
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Police Chief Willie Williams will get $375,000 in severance pay from taxpayers and leave quietly next month under a deal struck Tuesday despite political foes' claims that it amounts to extortion.

The City Council approved the "golden handshake" package 8-7 after two hours in closed session. Observers said the session included quite a bit of arm twisting by Mayor Richard Riordan who claimed the severance would allow the chief to leave with dignity.

"The idea that somehow this is going to enable him to leave with dignity is absurd. There is no dignity in extortion," said Councilman Joel Wachs, who voted against the deal.

Williams' management and honesty came under fire during his term as chief. The severance package sets a bad precedent, Wachs and other council members argued.

"I strongly opposed this package," Wachs said. "Our lawyers have made it very, very clear that he's not entitled to it, that he should finish and leave. He's getting more money now for not working."

Williams, whose five-year contract wasn't renewed by the Police Commission, will leave May 17, six weeks before his term officially ends on July 6. The chief had earlier threatened to challenge the commission decision in court.

Mediator Richard "Skip" Byrne, a retired Superior Court presiding judge, assured the council there would be no litigation if there was approval. Police Commission President Raymond Fisher also pressed for the deal.

"This is in the best interest of the city of Los Angeles," Riordan said.

Councilman Richard Alatorre said the $375,000 package avoids a prolonged and costly legal battle. It's time to "cut our losses," the councilman said.

"I don't want to have to wait a year from now to litigate it, spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to find that out," Alatorre explained.

Williams didn't immediately comment on the package. His lawyer, Peter Ostroff, said the chief "feels it is in his best interest and his family's and the city, and it's appropriate to put this all behind us and move ahead. He's a healer."

Although he's leaving six weeks early, Williams will be paid approximately $40,000 in salary through the July 6 end of his term.

Last month, the commission refused to rehire Williams for a second term. The chief claimed the Police Commission was biased against him.

The early departure means the commission can begin transition to an interim chief.

"We need to get somebody in place. The sooner the better," Fisher said.

The council wouldn't agree to several of Williams' earlier demands, including payment of his legal fees and compensation for $100,000 depreciation on his suburban Woodland Hills home.

But Wachs noted, "With $375,000, he can do whatever he wants with the money."

Councilman Nate Holden, a staunch Williams supporter, tried to force a stalemate by not voting, but inadvertently cast the affirmative vote that broke the 7-7 tie.

"There was no vote!" he yelled to reporters. "Ask the president. I walked out, I was not here. ... It's seven to seven."

Council President John Ferraro responded: "If you're in the room (during roll call), unless you specifically vote no, it's an 'aye' vote."

Asked whether he had pulled a parliamentary fast one, Ferraro said: "I never pull a fast one. I am a dedicated public servant."

tor and said, "It's a lot more serious than a bingo game."

By renumbering the jurors, Matsch was creating an anonymous jury because reporters and the public would not be able to link panelists with answers they gave during questioning.

Since the trial began three weeks ago, Matsch has been meeting in secret with lawyers to handle the dismissal of prospective jurors based on their beliefs about the death penalty or other views. He's even barred reporters from seeing prospects' faces and kept them from getting transcripts of court sessions.

"I think the public has a lot to lose," said Jane Kirtley, executive director for the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press in Washington. "The public vets the jury as well as the judge and lawyers. Our whole system of justice is on trial here."

But Jack King, spokesman for the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers in Washington, said Matsch is just being cautious.

King said a secret process "prevents juror intimidation, and keeps them from being bothered by the press if they don't want it."

The defense mulled over its peremptory challenges for up to 30 seconds at a time, with McVeigh and his attorneys working off of charts and multicolored graphs.

As the session wore on, McVeigh became increasingly involved in the decision-making. Working with two black felt pens - a fat one and a skinny one - McVeigh scratched off the numbers of excused jurors and frequently leaned over to confer with Jones.

The court day began with the judge rejecting a number of last-minute defense motions, including one to delay the trial because of publicity from the weekend's services for the second anniversary of the bombing.

"I don't know how anyone could have missed all the bells that rang in the city at 9:02 on Saturday morning," Jones said.

Said Matsch: "I don't think any time is necessary."

In Oklahoma City, Rudy Guzman, whose brother was killed in the bombing, watched a closed-circuit telecast of the jury selection and made plans to head to Denver for opening statements.

"I will be there to stare down Timothy McVeigh," he said. "If Judge Matsch would let me talk to him, I'd tell him, 'tell me the truth, boy.'"

The Cal poly women's water polo team had a busy weekend, hosting Santa Clara for two games last Friday. Cal Poly's "A" team defeated Santa Clara 9-5. The "B" team lost to the Broncos 5-3. The team also traveled to Santa Barbara Saturday to compete in a tournament. They lost all three games to close out the season.

School records broken in Track & Field meet

Daily Staff Report

The men's and women's Track and Field teams turned in a solid performance at the Pomona Pitzer/Mt. Sac Relays last weekend, breaking school records left and right.

Senior pole vaulter Sean Brown finished first with a vault of 18 feet, six and three-quarters inches. He broke his own school record of 18 feet, one inch that he set March 15. Brown earned an automatic qualification to the NCAA Track and Field Championships in Indianapolis in May.

Shot putter and discus thrower Andy Sverchek finished second in the discus with a mark of 178 feet, five inches, breaking his old school record of 175 feet, eight inches that he set at the Cal Poly Invitational on March 15.

Sprinter Kaaron Conwright set personal best times in both the 100m and 200m races. He placed first in his heat in the 100m and fourth in the 200m.

On the women's side, sophomore Cynthia Pettibon broke the school record by more than a foot in the triple jump with a mark of 40 feet, five and one-half inches.

Hurdler Charon Stewart placed fourth in the 400m hurdles with a personal best time of 1:01.3.

Love beats out Mickelson in playoff for title at World Championships

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press

EATONTON, Ga. — Phil Mickelson made a brilliant shot to advance to the American finals of the Andersen Consulting World Championship of Golf on Tuesday. Then he was beaten by one that was almost as good.

With winds gusting off Lake Oconee from an approaching storm, Davis Love III put his tee shot within two feet of the hole on the second playoff hole and knocked in the birdie putt to beat Mickelson for the U.S. title in the match-play event.

Love's victory on the Great Waters course in east Georgia sends him to play the European, Japanese and International champions in the world finals next January at Scottsdale, Ariz. He also assures himself of at least $500,000 in the $3.65 million event.

The first time he played the 159-yard 17th hole, Love thought his tee shot was right on the flag, but it skidded past the green and he settled for a par. Mickelson birdied the hole to even the match.

After both players birdied the 18th hole, it was back to 16 for the playoff. Both men were dragging — Mickelson needed 18 holes to beat Fred Couples in the semifinal earlier in the day, while Love used 16 holes to defeat Tom Lehman 3 and 2 — and they both had shaky pars to force another extra hole.

"It was a tough match," Love said. "It was not a well-played match. I think we both ran out of gas."

But not before Love stepped up to 17 again, pulled out the same 7-iron he had used the first time and, with a nice, easy swing, knocked the ball just beyond the flag.

"Boy, if that's not right on it," Love said, admiring the ball as it sailed toward the green.

Mickelson went about 25 feet right of the cup with his tee shot and missed the tricky, downhill putt. Love stepped up and sank his winning birdie just in time to make it to the clubhouse before severe thunderstorms swept over the Jack Nicklaus-designed course.

"That was my best shot of the week," Love said, "and it was a great time to have it."

Mickelson knew that feeling earlier in the day. In his semifinal match against Couples, with the two golfers tied heading to the par-5 18th hole, Mickelson hit his 228-yard second shot to within six inches of the cup, just short of a double-eagle.

Couples conceded the eagle and was forced to go straight at the flag with his second shot. He wound up missing the green to the right and chipped up 15 feet short of the flag to give the match to Mickelson.

"I'm disappointed, but it was a good match," said Couples, who lost despite a round that included six birdies and no bogeys. "It was fun to be a part of that. What a shot he hit on 18!"

Mickelson played bogey-free golf in the semifinal, but struggled in his match against Love. He hit his tee shot in the water at the par-3 14th and took a bogey, then made a critical mistake two holes later when his 9-iron from the middle of the fairway rolled back off the green and he took another bogey.

"Yeah, I was tired," said Mickelson, who wound up playing 38 holes on the day but can be consoled by his $150,000 prize. "I hit a couple of sloppy shots."

But there was nothing sloppy about Love's final tee shot.

"It's not nearly as bad for him to hit a great shot to beat me than if I had hit the ball in the water," Mickelson said. "Then I really would have been disappointed with myself."

Love advanced to the finals with a 3-and-2 victory over Tom Lehman, the world's top-ranked player.

After losing the first two holes, Lehman rebounded to even the match with a birdie at No. 10. But he gave the hole right back at 11, using the wrong club off the tee and then hitting his second shot in the water. He took a bogey to fall 1-down.

"After that, I was too angry to play well," admitted Lehman, who also lost the 13th and 14th holes to doom his chances. "There are not too many times I get angry and it affects my game, but it hap-
