RIDING HIGH: Many students choose to bicycle to school at Cal Poly. Bicyclists are subject to the same laws as car drivers. Bikes are not allowed on many popular roads on campus to prevent collisions between bikes and pedestrians.

Bike commuters keep on truckin' despite rules prohibiting them on certain campus routes

Bikers, take notice.

Bike riders are required to follow all the rules of the road even though they may be riding in the bike lane, and if they fail to follow these rules, they can get a ticket.

Failing to stop at a stop sign, not yielding to pedestrians, and riding on the wrong side of the street are just a few violations Cal Poly Officer Ray Urbano sees every day.

"The belief people have is that the rules of the road don't apply to bikes," Urbano said.

When you are riding in the street, you must obey the same laws whether you are in a car, on a motorcycle, or on a bike, he said. If you get a ticket, the fine is the same regardless of your mode of transportation.

Most students are aware of these rules, but choose not to follow them.

Chris Webster, a psychology senior, said he doesn't obey any of the rules.

"Until I get caught I might as well run the line," Webster said.

This seems to be the attitude of most bicyclists on campus.

Seth Larson, a liberal studies senior, said he doesn't stop at stop signs on campus unless he sees a car coming.

Terrors of Iraq exposed in slide show

By Jose Garcia
Mustang Daily

A malnourished boy, whose shriveled skin shrinks to fit the mold of his facial bone structure, stares upward with his protruding brown eyes.

The small boy, a victim of political jousting at home and abroad, is firmly clutched by his apprehensive mother while a humanitarian worker captures the deafening scene with a camera.

Another mother belts out a cry while pleading with the humanitarian worker to take her child back to his country so the child can receive the proper medication to survive.

During a slide show presentation on Oct. 2 in the San Luis Obispo City-County Library, local resident and Catholic philanthropist Dennis Apel showed the horrific images of what he witnessed in Iraq, a country whose infrastructure is crumbling. Iraq's instability is the result of a trade embargo the United Nations Security Council imposed on Iraq after the Persian Gulf War in 1990 that forbids any country from trading basic goods with Iraq. Apel captured these dramatic scenes during a humanitarian mission in May when a delegation of 82 Americans delivered $4 million worth of medical supplies to Iraqi hospitals. Doctors at the hospitals they visited earn a $10 a month salary.

Nabel Daniel, mechanical engineering junior, is an Assyrian-Christian who was born in Baghdad, Iraq. He, along with approximately 40 people, attended Friday's presentation.

"I was moved by what I saw on the slides," Nabel said. "I just prepared myself for the worst before I came. I think the U.N. can find a better way to put pressure on Saddam Hussein (Iraqi dictator). I've had an aunt and grandmother die over there. I don't think they received any hospitalization from what I saw on the slides.

"I'm going to call my parents and ask them to tell me the truth because I think they've been softening the blow when it comes to telling me what is occurring in Iraq and with relatives. I want to know truthfully what the heck is happening to my family in Iraq. They're trying to protect

Club kicked out of UU

By Mike Munson
Mustang Daily

Some members of Polyphase, the oldest club on campus, are disappointed with the results of their two-week-long fund-raiser this quarter after ASI asked them to move their operation out of the UU.

The club, which sells books on consignment, charges students 10 percent of the book's selling price. According to Chris Ellwood, vice president of the club, Polyphase has run its book exchange since the 1940s and has operated it out of the UU since the 1970s. Primarily, the money is used to fund an electrical engineering freshman orientation and a spring industry job tour.

Polyphase is a social club affiliated with the electrical engineering department with more than 70 years at Cal Poly.

Jackie Cross, president of Polyphase, turned in a request during spring quarter to sponsor a student meeting in the UU for the fall book exchange. She expected it to be approved as in previous years and was surprised when she received a denial letter on July 7.

"I was just under the impression that everything was OK," said Cross, who said club members were not able to discuss the change with ASI officials before this quarter due to the summer break.

According to Amy Luker, ASI Board of Directors chairwoman, Polyphase was denied UU room 219 because it has been designated for other uses. Luker said, in an effort to update the UU, the room and several others were redesigned and supplied with new furniture and multimedia pretty easy to burn," Larson said. "There are no major intersections."

Aside from the rules of the road, there are a few places on campus and throughout the community where bicyclists are not allowed to ride because there is too much pedestrian traffic. Some of these areas are University Union Plaza, Poly View Drive and the inner-perimeter road traveling throughout the campus. Usually there are signs posted that say "No Bicycles." If you are caught riding through one of these areas on your bike, you will more than likely be fined, Urbano said.

When riding at night, bicyclists are required by state to have a rear reflector and a front headlight. The headlight must be visible up to 300 feet. Even though this law serves to ensure the safety of the rider, some bikers still choose not to obey it.

"I got warned three times to use a light, but I never bothered to buy one," Webster said. "They are too expensive."

Some adult bicyclists choose to wear helmets even though only riders under the age of 18 are required to. Helmets, are an important bike-safety tool, Urbano said.

"Seventy-five percent of accidents involving vehicles and bikes are the fault of the bicyclist," he said. Helmets lessen the injuries caused by such accidents.

"All we ask is they (bikers) operate in a safe and lawful manner so no one gets hurt," Urbano said.

equipment over the summer.

Since its update the room has been used more frequently for meetings, including those of the ASI board and finance committee.

"Since we got the furniture we've scheduled a lot more meetings in that room," Luker said. She would like to continue giving Polyphase use of the UU, but two weeks is too much time to give up such a large space to one club.

"I can understand why they're not happy with it, but to block out a room for that amount of time creates problems," said Luker, who also believes it is not fair to allow Polyphase such access when there are 400 other clubs on campus.

LindaLee Thoresen, ASI's UU reservations manager, said it was impossible to stack or store the new furniture in the room to make way for Polyphase's bookshelves.

"That was the reason we worked with them to put them out in the UU Plaza," Thoresen said.

According to Cesar Pastore, a Polyphase member, the club had to spend $200 to rent a storage unit and have it delivered to the UU Plaza for use in this quarter's book exchange. In past years, when ASI allowed the book exchange indoors, the club never had to pay for facility use.

"It's a real shame our operations keep getting moved around and we can't have one consistent place to sell our books."

— Chris Ellwood
vice president of Polyphase

Ellwood said because of the new furniture and multimedia equipment, the club offered to put down a security deposit. Polyphase has never damaged the UU facilities in the past, but ASI was not swayed.

According to Ellwood, Thoresen also told the club that its bookshelves were "eyesores" and did not fit with the UU's new image.

Thoresen denied making the statement saying the new furniture and equipment was the sole reason ASI asked the club to move outdoors.

In the past Polyphase had trouble when ASI moved the operation from the picture identification area of the UU to room 219. Students have had trouble finding the book exchange this quarter now that it is outdoors.

"It's a real shame our operations keep getting moved around and we can't have one consistent place to sell our books," said Ellwood. "We are a very beneficial club to the university."

The club placed flyers in the book exchange's old UU location this quarter to direct students to the new spot. However, Thoresen would only allow one flyer on a bulletin board and took the rest down.

This quarter's book exchange saw fewer customers than in past years said Ellwood. A majority of the book exchange's customers have agreed that the new location is inconvenient and hard to find. The club started a petition asking ASI to allow the book exchange back into the UU. Ellwood and Cross will present several pages of customer signatures to Thoresen at a meeting to discuss the results of this year's operation and the future of the book exchange.

It just makes good 'cents' to pay less

Some businesses prefer ethical marketing and persuasion appealing to the intellect and strengths in potential consumers. Others prefer the reverse psychology approach, insulting consumers through bias propaganda, hoping the consumer will think, "I'll show you how stupid I am" and in turn purchase the goods of the business. Sad as it is, our own beloved El Corral Bookstore has stooped to a new low in its advertising.

In full-page ads, running every day last week, El Corral made its strongest attempts to not only persuade students to purchase courseware, but rid itself of Aida's bookstore. It drew a list of courseware purchased at El Corral and Aida's (or the "competition" as they call it) and their respective buyback prices. The price on every book from the "competition" was lower. The only difference in the comparison was the buyback prices. In that arena, El Corral took the title.

What El Corral failed to recognize, was buyback prices are important at the end of the quarter, not the beginning. In the beginning of a quarter, starving students and dedicated scholars are trying to conserve cash. How is that going to happen when students at El Corral are paying as much as sixteen percent more on a book (source:ad)? For students putting themselves through school, a dollar saved is a dollar earned.

El Corral is in the business of making money. What American business isn't, right? What angers me, and hopefully some of you reading this article, is that El Corral can't be ethical in its advertising. Instead it chooses to insult its consumers, and dissolve the idea of fair competition.

Is the competition a fancy store with suspended lights and tile floor? Does it sell everything from computers to keychains? Nope, wrong store. What they do have and what makes me proud to shop there is an honest owner, decent prices and nice fluorescent lights.

So if you really want to make some money back on your books, buy your courseware at Aida's, use and sell them to El Corral. You're bound to make money that way.

Disabled and successful is a way to go through college

Editor:

When I picked up the Mustang Daily to read the opinion about disabled persons, I started to get really mad. I could not believe that someone would blatantly bash other fellow students who are "so called handicapped" and who have special privileges here at Cal Poly, like me.

I have dyslexia, ADD and residual effects after a severe concussion from a bike accident. So I have a couple things against me from the start, but did I retreat and not try? No, I succeeded and with a whole lot of effort through grade school, high school and finally here at Cal Poly, one of the toughest State schools. I don't appreciate your ignorance, nonsense, and belittling of the "Learning Disabled," not the "handicapped."

I came here because of the great benefits the Disabled Student Services provides: priority registration, test proctoring, notetakers, books on tape and many other services. They help me to be successful here.

Your comments about ADD being an "educational phenomenon" is a bunch of b.s., until recently people didn't understand much about it now they do. They know more about it and ways to diagnose and remedy it, like taking Ritalin. Now picture this, what if you couldn't sit down and study one subject without getting distracted. That's what it's like having ADD. It's not much fun; I almost flunked out of Cal Poly.

That statement that only people who work should get "favorable intervention" is outlandish. What the hell do you mean by that, you "choose" to work. I can't work and go to school. It's too difficult for me to try to balance them and be successful here. I think you should look around the campus and see people who are disabled, like someone in a wheelchair, and look up to them for being here.

Next time you want to cap on people be careful what you say. I will graduate, I will get my diploma and I will be successful in my life.

Lobbyists and bill sponsors helped lower graduate fees

Editor:

Last week, the Mustang Daily ran a front page story entitled "Graduate Fees Going Down in 99." Although I am pleased that issues impacting graduate students are covered by the campus newspaper, this article left several misleading impressions.

I wish that reporter Britt Fekete had interviewed Susan Cusack, the Legislative & Public Relations Coordinator for the California State Student Association (CSSA). This organization helped sponsor Senate Bill 1896 on behalf of graduate students who struggle to cover educational costs. Sadly, Cal Poly ASI does not currently pay dues to this worthwhile advocacy group.

Who really deserves praise for lowering graduate fees? The CSSA. The legislators who voted yes. The graduate students from Sacramento State who lobbied in the Capitol. The many graduate students from across the state who forwarded e-mail legislative alerts and wrote letters to the Governor when a veto seemed likely. The faculty and staff who joined our legislative campaign.

And who actively opposed this legislation? The CSU Chancellor's Office. In official correspondence with the Assembly Higher Education Committee, the CSU argued: "While we agree that the state must work to ensure that students have an opportunity to seek higher education, we do not believe that the proposed fee reduction is the best approach to ensuring access, affordability and quality for our students."

Graduate students cannot depend on the CSU infrastructure to always represent our needs and interests. We need to organize both on this campus and throughout the Cal State system. Readers interested in participating in the formation of a campus-wide Graduate Student Council can contact me by e-mail (ebrunner@calpoly.edu).

"That's what this campus needs, more beef jerky."

Resident advisers are people too

Last year I was a Residential Adviser (RA) in the Sierra Madre Dorms. While I don't regret taking on the job, I also can't forget how hard it was to handle sometimes. RA's and their residents have a very awkward relationship. The RA wants to be friends with the people in their hall, but for some reason, usually end up being the enemy. Of course, this is not always the case. I know some RA's who have great relationships with their tower buddies. But even these RA's will tell you there were times they felt like an outcast.

The majority of people misunderstand RA's. They think that RA's were put there to prevent them from having any fun in the dorms. By fun I mean partying and drinking. People who sign the housing contract know that Cal Poly is a dry campus, yet they continue to sneak in the Bud. Students cannot expect RA's to turn a blind eye if they hear loud music and smell beer coming from your room in the wee hours of the morning. RA's have a responsibility to ensure that other people are not disturbed by you, so they can go to sleep. After all, we're not getting free room and board to do jack-all.

I did not like being the 'police' on a Friday and Saturday night, and it was hard to tell my peers what to do. A lot of freshmen resent the RA authority figure because they see them as acting like their parents, something they have been dying to get away from. But it doesn't have to be like that.

If you really want to drink, and knowing that Cal Poly will probably never change its dry campus policy, then simply go and do it, away from the dorms. If you're too drunk to come back, don't. You're asking for a write up. It's not that we mind that you drink. Let's be honest now, RA's drink too.

It's not like we become an RA and immediately become saints. But once we take that role, we are expected to follow the rules in the dorms and we expect you do too. It's all about taking responsibility for yourselves and the needs of others.

So does that mean that RA's and their "wards" can never get along? I feel like I made many friends in my tower when I was an RA, but there were also times when I felt isolated because I couldn't go out and socialize with them if alcohol was there. Socializing at parties is one of the biggest ways that people get to know one another. Everyone's happy, people loosen up. I remember one day my residents wanted me to go to a party with them off campus. Eager to fit in, I did.

The next day I had strangers pointing the finger at me and saying "I saw you at that party," knowing that I shouldn't have been there. It creates a double standard, saying one thing and doing another. But I was sick of the RA stigma and feeling like an outcast or a police officer. And to tell you the truth, that night I got to know many people from my tower better. I wasn't such a demon after all.

The stigma of being an RA still haunts me even though I live off campus with four rad house mates and no longer work in Sierra Madre. On Saturday I went to a Frat party, and as I walked in, the guy at the door reminded me of my RA history. It made me feel guilty for being there.

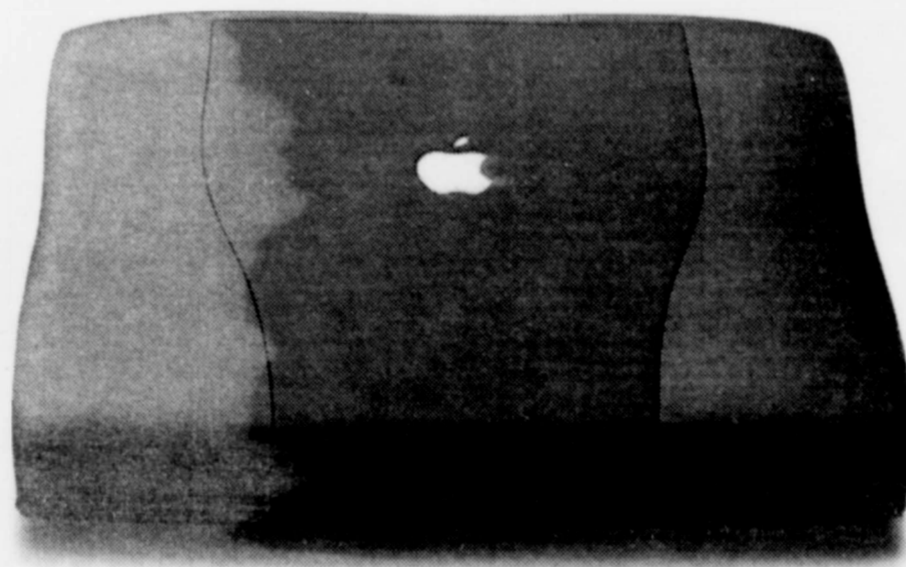

RA's have to play the role of the authority figure and friend, and often this is hard to juggle. So, next time you see your RA, say "hi" to them and try to understand that they are not out to "get you," but to help you and to be your friend.

I was not only an RA but an exchange student from Australia, so I had even more to deal with - having people imitate my accent (badly!) and forcing them to down vegemite ... but that's another story.

California students expect to be happier

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As the song goes, all the leaves are brown (well, almost) and the sky is gray. But would you really be happier if you were in L.A.?

Maybe not, though many people seem to think so, researchers say.

When nearly 2,000 college students from the Midwest and Southern California were asked to rate quality of life for others like themselves, both groups predicted Californians would be happier than Midwesterners.

When the students rated their own satisfaction, those living in the chill of Ann Arbor, Mich., or Columbus, Ohio, turned out to be just as happy as those in sunny Los Angeles or Irvine.

Why are perceptions and reality so far apart?

When people think of Los Angeles, they tend to focus on the most obvious differences: the warm and sunny climate and the cultural opportunities, like art museums, shopping or beaches, researchers said.

In reality, "most people don't ever go to Rodeo Drive much less shop there, and most people don't go to the beach at Malibu," said David Schkade, a management professor at the University of Texas and co-author of "Does Living in California Make People Happy?"

Instead, he said, "how happy you are depends a lot less on the distinctive features of the place than it does on the ordinary activities of the day."

When the students were asked to rate the factors most important to their well-being, they picked job prospects, academic opportunity, finances and social life.

Schkade and Daniel Kahneman of Princeton University presented their study in the September issue of Psychological Science, published by the American Psychological Society.

They surveyed students from the University of Michigan, Ohio State, the University of California at Los Angeles, and the University of California at Irvine.

Poll: Bar patrons like smoking ban

SACRAMENTO (AP) — Californians who frequent bars like the 9-month-old ban on smoking, according to a new poll.

A firm hired by the state Department of Health Services found that 65 percent of bar patrons surveyed approve of the law prohibiting smoking in bars and taverns.

That was up from 59 percent in a similar poll conducted in February and March, the department said.

The percentage of patrons who said they visit bars once a week or more and who support the law increased from 46 percent last winter to 59 percent in the new survey.

However, a Roseville bar owner who was fined last spring in one of the first tests of the new law said he wonders where the pollsters found those bar patrons.

"All mine are not (supportive) and every other bar owner I know has the same idea I have," said Bill Ostrander, owner of the Almond Tree Lounge. "I don't know where they polled this."

He said 90 percent of his patrons and all of his help smoke.

"You come in here and you see all the people out on the patio smoking. My bar is empty," he said.

Cereal is No. 1 source of kids' nutrition

Study: Children aren't eating fruits and vegetables

CHICAGO (AP) — A government study found cold breakfast cereal was the main source of key vitamins and minerals for American children, and that's not necessarily a good thing.

Children may be eating fortified cereal in place of vitamin-rich fruits and vegetables, which contain fiber and cancer-fighting substances, said Amy Subar, a research nutritionist with the National Cancer Institute.

Her findings were published Tuesday in the October issue of Pediatrics, a journal of the American Academy of Pediatrics.

The findings show just how little of the foods with naturally occurring nutrients kids are eating, she said.

Kellogg, the world's leading maker of ready-to-eat cereal, sees the study as good news. "It really does show the role cereal can play in delivering important nutrients in kids' diets," spokeswoman Karen Kafer said.

Subar said cereal is not necessarily unhealthy. In fact, fortified cereal appears to be among the more nutritious foods children are eating.

"We just shouldn't kid ourselves that they're necessarily getting all that they need (from cereal)," she said.

The study of 4,008 children ages 2 through 18 looked at 20 foods they ate between 1989 and 1991, and cereal was the No. 1 source of vitamin A, iron and folic acid for every age. Folic acid has been shown to reduce the risk of certain types of cancer.

Researchers also found that cereal was the third-highest source of zinc and magnesium.

The researchers did not reach a conclusion on whether the children were getting a nutritionally sound diet, but the findings suggested their diets may be lacking.

For example, sugary drinks were the No. 2 source of carbohydrates, behind bread.

And high-fat foods such as cakes and cookies ranked among youngsters' top 10 sources of vitamin E, protein, fiber, calcium and iron.

Gail Frank, a California dietitian and spokeswoman for the American Dietetic Association, said the findings were not surprising but also not terribly worrisome.

Court decision may spur more school drug tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — Public schools nationwide may be encouraged to require more students to take drug tests after the Supreme Court allowed an Indiana district to continue such tests.

Rejecting an appeal by teenagers and their parents on Monday, the court let a rural school district conduct random drug tests for all students in extracurricular activities — from sports teams to the library club — even if they are not individually suspected of using drugs.

The justices, acting without comment, left intact a federal appeals court ruling that said such testing does not violate students' privacy rights.

Starting its 1998-99 term with a flurry of paperwork, the court issued orders in more than 1,600 cases. It granted full review to just six.

Outside the stately courthouse, more than 1,000 members of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People noisily demonstrated Monday to protest the court's lack of minority law clerks. NAACP President Kweisi Mfume and 18 other people were arrested for trying to demonstrate on court property.

The court's action in the drug-testing case is not a decision and therefore sets no national precedent, but it left in place a ruling that remains binding law in three states — Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin. And it may entice educators in other states to expand drug testing.

FCC to review long-distance phone fees

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government decided Monday to take another look at federally regulated fees that make up a big portion of long-distance bills, raising the possibility of savings for customers.

Specifically, the Federal Communications Commission will be reviewing the "access" fees that long-distance companies pay to local phone carriers to connect calls. Those fees, which are passed along to long-distance customers, make up about 40 percent of the average $22.50 monthly residential long-distance bill.

The FCC said it will seek public and industry comment on the amount of fees now charged.

The commission didn't say what, if anything, it intends to do about them. But its action raises the possibility of additional cuts to the fees, which would lower long-distance bills if reductions are passed along to customers.

It is unlikely the commission, under pressure to keep phone bills stable, would raise the fees because that would make bills go up.

The FCC last ordered the payments cut in May 1997 by $1.7 billion to better reflect local phone companies' costs to connect long-distance calls. The payments total about $23 billion.

Still, consumer groups and long-distance companies have been pushing regulators for billions in additional cuts, saying the current fees are artificially high.

Local phone companies say more government-ordered cuts would either lead to decreased investment in their networks or force them to go to state regulators and seek local rate increases. But some local phone companies want the FCC to give them the flexibility to lower their fees to respond to competitive factors.

"With the help of commenters we will decide who's right and make any necessary adjustment," FCC Chairman Bill Kennard said.

Further complicating the matter: Part of the fees — and there's a dispute over how much — goes to make local phone service affordable to poor people and customers living in rural and other high-cost areas.

49ers owner DeBartolo likely to plead today

Testimony could be traded for leniency

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — San Francisco 49ers owner Edward DeBartolo Jr. is likely to enter a plea bargain today in connection with the investigation of former Gov. Edwin Edwards, The Associated Press has learned.

DeBartolo reached the plea agreement with federal prosecutors last month in which he reportedly will be granted leniency in exchange for testifying against Edwards, according to a source close to the investigation who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The move could help DeBartolo in his efforts to regain control of the 49ers. He resigned as chairman and turned management control of the team over to his sister in December 1997, shortly after he was notified by prosecutors that he was a target of the investigation.

According to the source, DeBartolo is expected to enter a plea to a minor crime, pay a fine and avoid jail time in exchange for his testimony.

The Times-Picayune of New Orleans reported that the fine could be as high as $1 million.

The investigation appears to focus on the licensing of riverboat casinos in Louisiana.

Prosecutors say DeBartolo was involved in a scheme to illegally influence the awarding of a riverboat casino license, according to media reports.

A DeBartolo partnership won the state's last riverboat casino license in March 1997, just days after DeBartolo gave Edwards $400,000 in cash. Edwards has said the money was for legal and lobbying services. Edwards was not governor at the time.

DeBartolo withdrew from the Bossier City riverboat project after appearing before the grand jury last year and state regulators took the license back. DeBartolo did not testify before the grand jury then, a source said, but invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination and refused to answer questions.

night.

Freshman Harmoni McDaniel scored the Mustang's winning goal in the second half of the game.

The Mustangs first goal was scored by junior Gina Ocegura, the Mustangs leading scorer. Ocegura drove through the defense and scored over the head of Aggies' goalie, Michaela Millor.

It was the Mustangs leading eighth goal of the year.

McDaniel's goal in the 86th minute was assisted by midfielder Eryn Gerhard. This turned out to be a much needed insurance goal, as Utah State came back 38 seconds later to score. The Aggies' midfielder, Emily Sutherland, struck back with a shot to the top left corner.

"We just played the way we usually do," said the Mustangs' coach,

"Irvine is 8-2-1. So it's going to be a battle."

— Kolleen Kassis
women's soccer assistant coach

Alex Crozier. "I think that needs to be our approach to every game."

Crozier said the Mustangs' defense is doing a good job this season. He said that the Aggies' performance has improved from last year.

"Their good, but they're not great," he said.

Utah State dropped to 0-3 in conference action. They are 3-7 overall.

The Mustangs' victory kept them undefeated, with a 6-4 record overall.

The Mustangs will try to increase their conference record to 4-0 when they travel to UC Irvine on Friday.

"Irvine is 8-2-1. They're in the top 20 in the region, so it's going to be a battle," said Kassis. "They're very aggressive physically, but we have a group of very talented girls, and so we have a good chance."

Chris Webber replaces lawyer

UPPER MARLBOR, Md. (AP) — Chris Webber of the Sacramento Kings will be getting a new lawyer in his case stemming from a traffic stop in Maryland in which he was charged with marijuana possession and resisting arrest.

Lawyer Marcel Solomon asked to be withdrawn from the case Monday. However, Judge Robert Woods ordered him to remain on the case until Webber gets a new lawyer. The reason for the change was not immediately clear.

"It doesn't help me or Mr. Webber to talk about this," Solomon said.

Webber, who was not in court

Monday, goes to trial Nov. 30.

The star forward was charged with second-degree assault, resisting arrest, marijuana possession, driving under the influence of drugs and several other traffic offenses after being stopped for speeding in Landover, Md., on Jan. 20 on his way to practice.

He passed a breathalyzer test but refused to submit to a blood test.

The arrest was one several off-court disturbances that prompted the Washington Wizards to trade Webber to the Kings for Mitch Richmond and Otis Thorpe in May.

Tyson fights record release

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Mike Tyson is going all the way to the Nevada Supreme Court to try to keep his psychological records under wraps.

After losing another bid Monday to keep the public from getting a glimpse inside Tyson's mind, attorneys for the former heavyweight champion said they would make an emergency appeal to the state's highest court.

At issue is whether reports from a team of psychiatrists that examined Tyson for five days last month to give to the Nevada Athletic Commission should also be made public.

"I sincerely believe that most people would find it abhorrent to be releasing somebody's medical or psychological records to the public," Tyson attorney Jim Jimmerson said.

A state judge refused Monday to reconsider his order last week that would allow the records to be made public upon their release to the athletic commission. Jimmerson said he would appeal either late Tuesday or Wednesday to the Nevada Supreme Court.

Whether the court will agree to hear the matter quickly, though, is another matter. If it doesn't, Tyson would either have to give up his challenge to the records or face losing a tentative Oct. 19 hearing before the commission to try to get his boxing license back.

"There's definitely an emergency here because of our upcoming hearing date," Jimmerson said.

Commission members ordered Tyson to undergo psychological tests following a Sept. 19 hearing on his request to replace a license revoked for biting Evander Holyfield's ears during their heavyweight title fight.

Tyson quickly complied, undergoing five days of exams before a team of psychiatrists at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

But, with the reports containing possibly embarrassing things about Tyson, he has been fighting to give them only to commissioners for their use in judging his fitness to return to the ring.

Tyson adviser Shelly Finkel said Monday he believes the reports will show Tyson is fit to fight.

"I don't think there's anything to hide," Finkel said. "But if you were going to go through five days of questioning from psychiatrists, I don't think you would want all your answers made public."

Nevada commissioners have said they want at least four working days to review the reports before the hearing, meaning they would have to be given to the commission by Oct. 12 for an Oct. 19 hearing.

some easy goals and definitely had the home field advantage.

"We went at it a little too carelessly maybe," Gartner said. "We're too careless turning the ball over. We need to play more defense; more risk-free in our own half of the field. The last 20 minutes we got pummeled by a very, very, good soccer team."

Cal Poly's second game of the tournament was on Sunday against Furman University. Cal Poly lost 1-0. Furman finished the tournament undefeated, bringing their record to 9-1-2 overall.

Furman's Stephen Rodriguez scored the only goal in the 80th minute of the game. According to Gartner, senior Martin Haynes scored a nice goal for Cal Poly but it was taken away when he was called offside.

Gartner said the team played reasonably well, although they didn't have as good of a game offensively as they did against Clemson.

Cal Poly only got off three shots at Furman goalie Ronnie Pascale, while Furman managed 13 shots on Mustang goalie Brenton Junge.

According to Gartner, the home team earned its win.

"There were moments we could have achieved more," said Gartner.

Despite Cal Poly's losses in South Carolina, Gartner is thankful for the experience the team had.

"It was the real big time," Gartner said. "Outstanding facilities and the friendliest, most supportive staff."

"It was a very positive experience overall," Gartner said. "I hope it toughens us up."

Gartner also feels that the games the Mustangs have played so far have helped the team get national recognition.

But it is crunch time now, and the team can't afford too many more losses.

"If we can take care of business at home, we're in the thick of things," Gartner said.

BRIEFS

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan denied in court Monday that he failed to go through with making the movie "Heaven is a Playground" because of the relatively small amount of money he would have received.

The Chicago Bulls superstar had agreed to appear in the 1991 movie for $350,000, while he later signed a $4 million deal to make "Space Jam."

Lawyer Robert Maland, representing the producers of "Heaven is a Playground," asked Jordan if that didn't give his agent sufficient incentive to steer him away from the movie.

"No," Jordan said.

Jordan and agent David Falk contend the producers of "Heaven is a Playground" failed to come up with adequate financing for the movie.

Mustangs survive double OT

Women's soccer ended Sunday's double overtime game against North Texas in a 1-1 tie, bringing their record to 6-4-1 overall, and 3-0-1 in conference play.

The Mustangs fell behind 1-0 after a close shot slipped by goalie Natalia Garcia, the only shot she missed in 120 minutes of play.

"She played very well, and she had a strong defense in front of her," said assistant coach Kolleen Kassis.

Cal Poly senior Shana Stickel tied the score on a long pass from junior Michelle George giving the Mustangs their only goal. Strong defensive play — especially in the second half — kept North Texas scoreless for the rest of the game.

The North Texas defense made a strong showing too, and allowed only one Mustang goal in 14 attempts.

"We had a lot of good chances," said Kassis. "Unfortunately we weren't able to put it away. We came out a little flat."

Garcia, a junior, saved four shots, bringing her average to 76 percent for the year, while North Texas goalie Adria Constano saved six.

In the other home game this weekend, the Cal Poly women's soccer team beat Utah State 2-1 Friday

Move over NFC, the AFC has more for the fans

I don't know if it's a big conspiracy or a complex inside joke orchestrated by the NFL owners, but whatever the cause it has me baffled. The AFC is a better conference for the fans.

First, the AFC has the league's best team, the undefeated Denver Broncos. They have a stifling defense led by Neil Smith and John Mobley and some of the most exciting offensive players with Terrell Davis, Shannon Sharpe, and John Elway. They're so good they've won their last three games with Bubba Brister at quarterback. Sure, the last win came against the arena league Philadelphia Eagles, but any team that can win with Bubba at the helm must have a great supporting cast.

The AFC also has an exciting race in every division.

The West is arguably the best division in football with the Broncos, the 4-1 Chiefs, and the 3-2 Seahawks. All three are playoff-caliber teams and have the capability of going deep in the playoffs. This gives fans several head-to-head games between these teams which should be great entertainment.

The NFC West, by contrast, is anything but competitive. The Raiders (oops, I meant the 49ers but can you blame me after that dreadful 22-penalty performance against the Bills) have no competition. The only redeeming quality in the NFC West is a Mike Ditka press conference.

The AFC Central is also very intriguing. The Jaguars are off to a 4-0 start, but have yet to face their division foe, the Steelers. The two teams had great battles last year, and we should expect the same this year.

The NFC Central is the only good division in the NFC, but the Packers overall depth and the Vikings weak pass rush should lessen the suspense at year's end.

The AFC East is a quality division with several interesting stories. The "Tuna" and his Jets against the Patriots, his former team, is always a good battle while the Dolphins, with their unheralded defense will also compete for the division.

The NFC East is nothing like its counterpart in the AFC. The division will be won by whoever wins the most division games since none of the teams can beat anyone outside their division. It is, however, a very exciting division if you enjoy punting.

When you start thinking about the playoffs, the AFC becomes much more interesting.

The Packers are clearly the best team in the NFC and have only two teams to worry about, the Vikings and the 49ers. However, the two high-powered offenses are ranked 24th and 29th in total defense, respectively. The three other playoff spots will go to teams who are not near the level the top three teams are at.

In the AFC, it is a completely different story. While the Broncos are the best team, the balanced Jaguars, and defensive-minded Chiefs are not far behind. Add the Steelers, Dolphins, Patriots, and Seahawks as possible spoilers and there are far more competitive match-ups in the AFC.

While the Packers could win the Super Bowl, the AFC is the league to watch until January.

Men's soccer loses two to top teams

By Trisha Thorn
Mustang Daily

The Cal Poly men's soccer team fell to 5-3-1 for the year after last weekend's Adidas Invitational in Clemson, S.C.

The team started with a 7-1 loss against Soccer America's fourth-ranked Clemson University on Friday night.

Freshman Johnny Cummins scored for Cal Poly in the first half tying Clemson, 1-1. The teams were tied beginning the second half until the Tigers put the Mustangs away.

Junior Brian Lange was red-carded, a call that Head Coach Wolfgang Gartner described as "horrendous."

"I think they were a little stunned by the double blow of a red card and an avoidable goal in the first half."

men's soccer head coach

The team was then forced to carry out the rest of the game with only 10 men on the field. Lange was also barred from playing in Saturday's game against Furman University.

According to Gartner any loss to the team is disruptive.

"I think they were a little stunned by the double blow of a red card and an avoidable goal in the first half," Gartner said.

Clemson's Wojtek Krakowiak went on to get a hat trick, his second of the season. Teammates Scott Bower and Mark Lisi both had two assists.
