PARKING METERS' NEW LOOK: Matt Ceppi, public services assistant for Public Safety, demonstrates the new parking meter keys. The key, which fits a standard key ring, eliminates the need to fumble for change at the meter.

117 digital parking meters take magnetic keys as well as coins

By Andrea Parker

Paying for parking at metered spaces on campus will soon be a simple matter of turning a key.

This month, 117 electronic parking meters will begin accepting a cash key in addition to coins.

"It's like a debit account for parking meter money," said Cindy Campbell, programs administrator for Public Safety Services.

Campbell said the cash key system will come to Cal Poly as a matter of customer convenience.

"In this day and age, you have a lot of things going to a cashless system," she said. "This follows upon that. We see this as the potential of being very convenient for students, faculty and staff to do their short-term campus business without pre-planning to make sure they have the correct amount of change in their pocket."

The keys will be available to anyone interested and can be purchased at the Public Safety building, located across the street from the faculty office building.

Each cash key initially costs $10, and credit can be added in any desired amount, up to $20. "The transaction is quick and easy enough that Public Safety will add as much as often as you want to do it," Campbell said.

"It's a very simple process to recharge your key," she said. "You don't get a new key, you just stick your key in, charge up the amount that you want to add to it, and you're on your way again."

Campbell said they set the limit at $20 to minimize the cash lost if the key is stolen or misplaced. "If the key is lost, it's

Fuel tanks removed to avoid pollution

By Chris Hoffman
Mustang Daily

Potentially hazardous underground fuel storage tanks at Cal Poly have been replaced by safer above-ground units.

A national program forced all single-walled underground fuel tanks to be emptied by Dec. 22 due to risk of groundwater pollution.

"It takes very little gas or oil to contaminate drinking water," energy and utility manager Ed Johnson said.

A program for replacing the tanks went into effect in the late 1980s, said Jay Cano, senior water resource control engineer of the Regional Water Quality Control Board. December was the deadline.

Doug Overman, assistant director of facilities services, said the underground tanks are no longer in use, but there is still work to be done.

"There's two things going on here," Overman said. "One of them is to get rid of the tanks underground. The other one is getting new tanks (operational)."

Nine decommissioned underground tanks need to be removed: two at the transportation services building, three at the farm shop across from the Campus Store

Smokers say price hike is a 'good reason to quit'

By Whitney Phaneuf
Mustang Daily

Proposition 10 caused cigarette prices to jump even higher at the first of the year, and while some students try to kick the habit, most contend it's easier to say than do.

San Luis Obispo 7-11 clerk Becky Witten said she hasn't seen students buying less cigarettes, and sales have actually increased in the last several weeks.

"It's an addiction," Witten said. "That's why I'm not quitting."

In November the tobacco industry raised prices on cigarettes by 50 cents a pack. Combined with the flat tax of 50 cents a pack implemented January 1, a pack of 20 cigarettes now costs at least $3.

Proposition 10, passed in the Nov. 3 general election, is a state constitutional amendment designed to generate an estimated $700 million annually for social services aimed at families with children under 5. Opponents said the proposition might take away from programs funded by existing cigarette taxes by cutting cigarette sales.

Cigarettes Cheaper on Foothill Boulevard in San Luis Obispo has not lost any business as a result of the increase. Employee Allen Masaoka has not noticed fewer students coming into the store, either.

"Actually, our customer base has increased," Masaoka said.

While picking up a pack of Parliament cigarettes at Cigarettes Cheaper, psychology senior Jackie Gagnon said she is trying to quit. She said she has been smoking since and four at the power plant at the Engineering South building. A contract is out to have them removed sometime in February.

Two above-ground storage tanks were constructed over winter break to replace the decommissioned tanks for a cost of nearly $55,000. Money came from a special repairs fund.

One of the tanks now exists in the transportation building and fuels campus vehicles, such as disabled student services trams and public safety vehicles.

The other new tank, a combination diesel and gasoline unit, has been added at the farm shop, but is not yet running. It will be used for maintaining pickup trucks and other equipment used by the agriculture department. The farm shop tank should be ready sometime in February after it is tested for vapor leakage, according to facilities services planner Greg Lampman.

Johnson said Cal Poly could have implemented underground double-walled tanks, but opted for above-ground tanks instead.

"It's easier and better to just put them above ground," he said. "If you've got an underground leak, it's extremely expensive to clean up."

as if you lost money," she said.

Public Safety will take reports on lost or stolen keys. Each one is serialized with a unique number, so if someone tried to recharge a stolen key, it would be indicated on the computer, Campbell said.

A cash key belongs to the person who purchased it, and unlike a parking permit, anyone can use it.

When a key is purchased, Public Safety Services will also provide a map of where the cash key meters are on campus, said Matthew Ceppi, programs services assistant for Public Safety.

According to Ceppi, the new meters will be strategically located at first.

"We're going to try to put them in some places where people are most likely to use them — the administration lot ... in the lot across from the Rec Center," Ceppi said. "We'll pass them out in (the lot) by the business building, we'll put some in G-1 across from VGs," he added.

Cuong Nguyen, a student affairs councilman, said he would use a cash key if he had a car. "I hate rummaging for change anyway."

"I think that if people fully utilize it ... it will work well. But it will only happen if it's publicized very well," Nguyen said.

According to Campbell, the cash key program was planned to have started earlier this winter, but not enough electronic meters were ready.

"The price increase is a good reason to quit," Gagnon said. "I don't want to be a smoker for the rest of my life."

Quitting smoking isn't easy, but Christy Radonich is happy to be free of the habit. She quit last November because of health reasons and the numerous disadvantages of smoking.

"You see those old ladies puffing on a cigarette, and I didn't want to become that," said Radonich, an English senior.

Even if she hadn't quit before, she said the tax increase would have forced her to stop.

"It was really expensive before, when it was only around $2 a pack, but now I definitely couldn't financially support the habit," Radonich said.

Though price provided a factor for her, she doesn't think it necessarily motivates smokers to quit.

"I know people look at it and want to quit. My dad's smoked for 30 years, and even he's thinking about quitting. But even though they complain how expensive it is, I don't see them quitting," Radonich said.

David Harrigan, computer science senior, has cut his smoking in half and moved from Marlboro Lights to Marlboro Ultra Lights since Proposition 10 forced prices up.

"It's forcing me to wean off the cigarettes," Harrigan said.

Before the tax passed, Harrigan paid around $2.25 for a pack of Marlboro Lights and now he pays anywhere between $3.75 and $4.75 for Marlboro Ultra Lights. He worries that prices will continue to increase due to tobacco companies settling lawsuits.

"I'm already thinking about quitting," Harrigan said.

Liberal viewpoint

Partisan hatred responsible for unending trial

We have all heard it, and we're all sick of it. Dragging us through the mud of our president and the slime of corrupt politics, the current impeachment trial tests the patience of even the most dedicated political scientist. The impeachment managers claim to stand on a ground of morality and virtue; however, they slip on the algae of political preservation.

With a 70 plus percent approval rating, and the obvious lack of a two thirds senate majority, the right wing — hard-core christian coalition preaching, rhetoric screaming, dispassionate hypocrites that are the impeachment managers — still refuse to accept defeat. Despite the efforts of wise moderates and loyal Democrats in the senate to consider some kind of plea bargain to keep the president in office while admitting guilt, the managers press on for a conviction. Claiming it's their conscience preaching and not their intellect, House managers adamantly refuse anything less than a conviction. What sense is this? Are these men to be admired or hated? If truly altruistic motives are propelling these men to certain political demise, than we should praise them.

However, it is my contention that partisan hatred has consumed the souls and minds of the House managers.

The big question: Did the president commit impeachable offenses? Deplorable: Yes. Disgusting: Yes. Unacceptable as a husband: Absolutely. Impeachable: NO!

Wake up, America. Presidents lie, congressman cheat and people in general are corrupt. Real people lie, real people cheat. If you assume anything less come out of your cave. Attempting to hold the leader of the free world to a higher moral standard is absurd. Let he who is without sin cast the first stone.

Regarding the trial, senators are at a critical point. Soon their votes will decide the fate of one of the better presidents of the 20th century. Given our representative government, the will of the people — to acquit — should prevail. Or should it? Senators are touring the talk-show circuit claiming only their conscience can make the decision. What? You are not in office for your personal morals and values, you are there to represent the will of the people. That will is a quick and positive close to this fiasco.

Seemingly disinterested in the political viability of their party in 2000, the Republican right wingers are up to their necks in quicksand, and sinking fast.

Let us not forget the lessons of Watergate. After pardoning Nixon, (a true low-life, but don't get me started) Gerald Ford (Republican) lost the 1976 election to Jimmy Carter (Democrat). The public resented Republicans, and the same fate could easily befall them once again in 2000, despite their claims of morality and virtue.

My philosophy: I am happy to see Republicans humiliate and embarrass themselves, just not at the expense of the American people's tolerance and faith in government.

Conservative viewpoint

Conscience, not political lines are motives for trial

The impeachment proceedings in the Senate have drawn on for a great while now. The promise of the Republicans to end the entire affair by the end of 1998 is a month overdue, and it looks like we'll be lucky to leave the trial of William Jefferson Clinton behind before March. Why, you might ask. Why is the Senate doing this? Specifically, why are the Republicans doing this and why won't they let it end? Why drag Lewinsky and others in to testify, and why not just motion to dismiss Clinton and end the whole thing?

After all, I'm tired of hearing about it, you're tired of hearing about it, and if the truth must be known I don't think it is in the best interest of the nation to remove our president from office. And politically, I don't think the Republicans are doing themselves any favors toward the elections in 2000. What's more, the Republicans aren't stupid; they know that public opinion is against them, they know that they might lose some seats and even the presidency in 2000, so why don't they just let it go? We all know Clinton's a liar now, we know he perjured himself and it seems pretty clear that he tampered with some witnesses, thereby obstructing justice. But is it worth all of the consequences?

It depends, I suppose, on how you weigh the consequences. The Republicans know they might lose their next election because of their unpopular decisions, they know that they are not being all together "representative" of their constituents and they know that no matter what they do they are damned either way. It is a catch-22 of sorts.

Yet for the men and women of the Senate, political consequences have, for once, taken a back seat. They were sworn into office under the condition that they would uphold the Constitution and the laws of the United States. They took an oath under God that they would ensure the rule of law and justice for all. And when it comes to the Senate trial, they must bear witness under these conditions. This is not a political affair anymore, it is one of conscience. And no one can make a decision of conscience regarding a possible criminal transgression without a trial. It is, after all, one of the founding points of our criminal justice system that every man should be afforded a trial when accused of a crime.

This is no longer a political dogfight, this is now a constitutional issue that must be investigated and resolved. No senator should ever compromise his conscience or his integrity to win an election. This is an issue of conscience; it has been put before our senators as such and it must be reckoned with as a non-political issue. While our senators bear a responsibility to execute the will of the people, they bear a greater responsibility to the laws of our nation and to their own integrity.

Team president Adam Swantko said the teams were equally skilled, but the Mustangs were put at a disadvantage when they lost a man in the second half.

"It was an evenly matched game," he said. "They are a really good team. They just pulled it off in the end, they had something we didn't."

The Mustangs didn't find what they needed to win Sunday, as they lost to Arizona State, 19-13.

It was an action-packed first half as the two teams struggled for the lead. Cal Poly shot ahead early with the first penalty kick for a 3-0 lead. But the Sun Devils were quick to come back, making a try but missing the conversion, making it 5-3.

Brown scored his first try and conversion this season, pushing Cal Poly back on top, 10-5, but the Mustangs couldn't keep the Sun Devils at bay, and they scored a try to lead, 12-10, at the end of the first half.

Cal Poly gained the upper hand in the second half with a penalty kick pushing the score to 13-12, but the final play of the day was a try and conversion by Arizona State, for a 19-13 win.

Besides a great play by Brown,

"There's not a whole lot of team continuity, due to not having a place to practice."

— Sean Ranney
rugby player

Gerner said team captain Dennis Yee also had a good game.

"Dennis played really well," he said. "He's a silent leader. He plays well when we need guys to step up."

Swantko said there were several reasons for the bad weekend.

"In both games we had a lot of penalties," he said. "And the team made a lot of mistakes that just killed us. Some guys just weren't really thinking."

He isn't worried, however.

"The team's a little bit in shock," he said. "I think we'll bounce back this weekend."

Sean Ranney, who plays east front row, thinks the team's been hurt by the lack of a place to practice together.

"There's a break between the forwards and the back," he said. "There's not a whole lot of team continuity, due to not having a place to practice."

Currently, the team has only a small section of the L-shaped field to practice on, and that area will soon be torn up to make way for the new parking structure. The team plays at Riverbottom Field in Arroyo Grande, but the charge to use those facilities would make it difficult to practice there, Ranney said.

Gerner has high hopes for the team this weekend when the Mustangs head south to take on the University of San Diego on Saturday at 1 p.m.

"I'm hoping we do well," he said. "Everyone seems to be keeping their heads up."

Let's make things better.

Agent denies Magic Johnson's plans to buy baseball team

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Basketball legend Magic Johnson is not involved in any group planning to buy the Oakland Athletics, his agent said Monday.

"Three months ago, we basically had two telephone discussions and passed on the deal," said Lon Rosen. "It just didn't look like the right thing to do."

Several San Francisco Bay area newspapers have reported in the past few days that a wealthy developer, John Kehriotis, has talked about the deal with Johnson, who owns a piece of the Los Angeles Lakers, and baseball Hall of Famer Frank Robinson.

"Who is he?" Rosen asked. "We deny it," he added. "He's probably a very nice gentleman, but no."

Kehriotis, part owner of the Sacramento Kings, told the San Francisco Chronicle that he hasn't actually spoken to either Robinson or Johnson, but has been negotiating with a Los Angeles attorney acting on behalf of the two sports stars.

Four other investor groups also have shown interest in a $120 million deal to buy the Athletics, according to Bob Caporale of Game Plan LLC, which is shopping the team for the city of Oakland and Alameda County.

Robinson, who played with the Baltimore Orioles and Cincinnati Reds and later was a field manager for the San Francisco Giants, is also interested in a management role, Kehriotis told the Contra Costa Times.

Kehriotis owns 8.25 percent of the Sacramento Kings and is building an Embassy Suites hotel in Las Vegas.

The Athletics' owners, Steve Schott and Ken Hofmann, put the team up for sale in December. In a settlement with the city and county, they agreed to drop their asking price from $155 million to $120 million for buyers willing to take on the existing lease at the Coliseum, which expires in 2004.

A local buyer must be found by April 21, or the team will go on the open market.

Practice has been broken down into two sessions. The men's 14 players practice from 1p.m.-3:30 p.m., while the women's 13 players practice from 3:30 p.m.-6 p.m..

The difficulty with the team's practices hasn't affected their game play. The men's win against Westmont college gave them a record of (1-1) while the women have a record of (2-0).

It may be hard for the team during practice but it's worth it, according to Gunther, since the six demolished courts were in poor condition and are being replaced.

"Getting a set of brand new courts is what we need," Gunther said.

awhile before they're finished.

"We've been working since December on abatement of the tennis courts," said Deby Ryan, project information coordinator for facilities planning.

The four new tennis courts will be placed behind the four existing courts while the four existing courts are being refinished.

Facility planning has their eyes set on next winter as the expected completion date of the project.

Callaway sues rival golf company

Associated Press

In a dispute between rival golf club manufacturers, Callaway Golf is suing Orlimar and claiming patent infringement and misleading advertising.

The lawsuit, filed Friday in San Diego, seeks an injunction and monetary damages.

The two California equipment companies have been at odds since last year, when Orlimar cut into Callaway's dominance in the fairway metals market.

Orlimar officials were traveling Monday and had not seen the lawsuit. President Ed Dolinar said he would have no comment until then.

Callaway, based in Carlsbad, contends the patent infringement concerns an undercut that goes all the way around the cavity behind the back of its irons and is designed to move weight from the face of the club.

It has another patent in which the undercut goes only around the heel, toe and bottom of the iron. Callaway lawyer Steve McCracken says Orlimar's TriMetal irons infringe on this development.

"They had shown the irons in their booth in Las Vegas (in August) but they were not available," McCracken said. "We were able to obtain one within the last two weeks, slice it open, analyze it and find the violation."

The other claim in the lawsuit alleges unfair competition. Callaway contends Orlimar has been running ads on its TriMetal driver that claim the 7.5 degree loft is a favorite on tour.

McCracken said according to the Darrell Survey, which keeps track of the clubs in a player's bag, there was only one 7.5 degree driver from Orlimar put in play on the four U.S. tours last year, and 11 this year.

Wrestling

It was all work and no play for the Cal Poly wrestling team on Super Bowl Sunday. While most were tuned into the big game, the Mustangs were having it out with Embry Riddle University and Arizona State.

The Mustangs won their first match against Embry Riddle, 29-14, taking all but three divisions against the Eagles.

Heavyweight Gan McGee anchored the match with the first win. The next two matches were taken by the Mustangs' Jaime Garza (125 lbs.), and Alberto Garza (133 lbs.), to bring the score to 12-0.

Senior David Wells (174 lbs.) defeated Demetrio Duran, 15-0, to bring the Mustangs to 23-15. Wins by Joey Hart (184 lbs.) and Mike French (197 lbs.) shot the Mustangs up to a final score of 29-14.

Things didn't go as well in the Mustangs' second match of the day against Arizona State.

The Mustangs were plagued by forfeits and last-minute turn-arounds, losing 27-14.

McGee once again started the Mustangs off well with a win against Randy Leydecker, but then the match turned in Arizona State's favor as they took the next four divisions, putting the score up to 15-3.

The Sun Devils had the added advantage of the absence of Cal Poly's Mark Apodaca (157 lbs.) and Hart, who injured his shoulder in the Embry Riddle match. The Mustangs forfeited both weight classes.

Cedric Haymon, who usually wrestles at the 149-pound level, stopped the Mustangs' downward spiral with a major 10-1 decision in the 157-pound division, bringing the score to 15-7.

Wells defeated Pat Catarello 12-2, and French finished off the match with a win for Cal Poly to bring the score to 27-14.

"I believe we could have beat them," Hart said. "A couple of matches were just down to the wire."

DROPPED TWO: The Mustangs (left) lost two tough games this weekend making them 1-3.

Rugby drops two

The Cal Poly rugby team is staying upbeat, despite a double loss this weekend to the University of Arizona and Arizona State.

The Mustangs were shut out, 18-0, by Arizona on Friday, and fell to Arizona State on Sunday, 19-13. The team is undaunted as they move up to take on the University of San Diego this Saturday.

"I think everybody's staying pretty positive," sophomore Jeff Brown said. "Every team goes through ups and downs. But there's a lot of work ahead of us this week, to prepare for San Diego."

On Friday the Mustangs got behind early when the Wildcats scored a penalty kick for a 3-0 lead, the only score of the first half. A second penalty kick early in the second half gave Arizona a 6-0 lead, and the gap widened when the Wildcats fired off two tries and a conversion in the last ten minutes of the game.

"We have a tendency to start off slow sometimes," flanker Rob Gerner said. "And against good teams like this weekend, we can't start off slow."

TORN UP: The tennis teams have only four courts left.

Tennis team has nowhere to hold court

By Burt McNaughton
Mustang Daily

The placement of Cal Poly's new parking structure has made practices for the tennis team a bit more challenging.

Cal Poly's new parking structure is being built beside the Performing Arts Center and has stripped away six tennis courts leaving the team with only four.

"It's hard when scheduling practices," Pete Gunther,

There was a whole lot of sucking goin' down at the Super Bowl

So the game sucked. Actually, I think the word "sucked" perfectly describes this year's Super Bowl.

Dan Reeves hates the Super Bowl.

The poor guy's heart took a brutal beating Sunday, as it had to withstand its fourth thumping. Hey, at least his average Super Bowl margin of defeat will come down — from 32!

Budweiser also blew it, big time.

After several brilliant commercials, they decided to climb up on their soapbox and preach about the importance of stopping underage drinking. The spot instantly incited a thunderous and unanimous boo throughout my living room and several of my 20-year-old buddies threw down their Budweiser in disgust.

Then, there's Eugene Robinson.

Good old Eugene. The family man. The Bill Clinton of the NFL. He got blown deep on Sunday — even though he would have preferred it Saturday night (allegedly).

Shannon Sharpe and Ray Buchanan both sucked.

All that great talk and so little great play. Buchanan did a good job shutting down Rod Smith (150 plus receiving yards) and Sharpe couldn't suck it up and play in the big game. And, at 8-1 odds, he was a half-yard away from the game's first touchdown — that sucks for me.

Speaking of odds, my betting skills sucked. I lost the Shannon Sharpe bet (even though I was close). I picked Ed McCaffery to catch more passes than Terrance Mathis (I lost seven to five) and I actually lost the friggin' coin toss. Very sad.

We didn't get to see much of the "Dirty Bird" on Sunday — okay, maybe that doesn't suck.

Chris Chandler blew it big when it counted.

The journeyman quarterback completed two really nice passes to Darrien Gordon, sealing the Falcons fate. Maybe, Chandler should try his sixth team next year.

Well, we actually don't have to wait until next year to watch NFL football. The Pro Bowl is only a couple of weeks away and that game never sucks.

Hey, I can't think of anything else that sucked. Oh wait, my column!

Mustangs lose on the road

Mustang Daily

The Cal Poly women's basketball lost on the road at California State University, Fullerton (88-80) on Jan. 30.

The Mustangs trailed 44-38 at half-time. In the second half CSU Fullerton lead by as much as 20 points in the second half before Cal Poly began to gain field goals.

With just under a minute remaining Cal Poly got within three points (83-80), but the Titans hit five of eight free throws.

There were four Mustang double-figure scorers who helped to close the gap in the second half. Those included Kristie Griffin who lead her team with 15 points and Sherilyn Frazier who accumulated 13 points.

Fullerton's Andrea Thieme kept the Mustangs' defense occupied by scoring 28 points for her team.

The Mustangs also lost to University of California, Irvine (63-55) on Jan. 28.

Next, the Cal Poly women's team will compete against University of the Pacific on Feb. 5, at 7 p.m.
