Carjacker remains on the loose

By Katherine Hays
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

San Luis Obispo Police Department investigators are still searching for the man they believe to be responsible for the April 16 carjacking and attempted kidnapping of a local woman.

The police obtained a copy of a surveillance video from the 7-11 convenience store on California Boulevard where the woman's car was found.

The police have been distributing the images statewide but have yet to identify the assailant.

"We've been showing the photo around everywhere, but no one has been able to identify him," said SLOPD Lt. Tony Costa.

Kim Bunfill, a 21 year-old Cuesta student, was one of the women attacked that night. She was attacked outside her San Luis Obispo home and was kidnapped and taken to a deserted parking lot off Santa Rosa Street. Bunfill found her opportunity to escape when her attacker put the gun on the dashboard to take a sip of her Diet Pepsi. Bunfill ran down the street to Taco Roco, where she was able to contact police.

The suspect then drove Bunfill's car to 7-11, walked around the store for several minutes, and then left, without the car.

According to police, this is where

Aborne, Smith envision new ASI

By Kirsten Orsini-Meinhard
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

When an industrial engineering student won the Associated Student Inc. president position over a fraternity member, some students coined a new phrase: "geeks over greeks."

Newly elected ASI president Samuel Aborne doesn't believe this description is valid.

"I don't necessarily think it's geeks over greeks; I think the students have made a statement that they want a different style of leadership on campus, that they want a different emphasis," Aborne said.

A new style of leadership has arrived.

Together with his vice president, Lewis Smith, Aborne plans to tackle ASI with a revised student government that focuses on advocacy rather than representation.

"We're more traditional student leaders — we have new ideas, and we're not afraid to try them," Aborne said. "We're also not afraid of failure."

As student body leaders, Aborne and Smith share a lot in common, and the similarities begin with their college lifestyles. The two

Baker signs sweatshop policy

By Victoria Walsh
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

President Warren Baker signed a code Tuesday preventing sweatshop conditions for Cal Poly's apparel providers.

Provost Paul Zingg said with Baker's signature, the code will be effective immediately.

"The code will ensure (Cal Poly) only does business with those companies who agree to the principles we established," Zingg said.

As of now, Cal Poly is a member of the Fair Labor Association (FLA). However, some students are hoping to make Cal Poly a member of the Worker's Rights Consortium (WRC). Because the two entities compete with each other, Cal Poly cannot be affiliated with both.

Political science junior Jesse McGowan, a member of the Progressive Student Alliance, wants to join the WRC because it's independent from government influence.

"The WRC is an organization made up entirely of students and faculty," McGowan said. "The entire University of California system has a code with the WRC. The FLA is a private, corporately-owned entity. When there are problems, they work it out amongst themselves."

Executive assistant to the president, Daniel Howard-Greene, said a change from the FLA to the WRC is still left open.

"As of now, the Foundation has no plans to leave (the FLA)," Greene said. "But we are always willing to talk about it. We want an organization that will help us carry out the principles stated in the contract."

Zingg said that whoever (Cal Poly) associates with, it must fulfill the code

Jimmy supporters face hostility

By Christine Powell
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Only four days have passed since the Cal Poly campus was infiltrated with visions of Jimmy from signs to yellow T-shirts representing an engineering sophomore's Christian cause.

Students wearing the T-shirts are members of numerous Christian clubs on campus who are sharing their religious message in what they thought was a non-obtrusive manner. However, the Jimmy supporters may have been wrong.

"I had one guy call me a bitch," said history sophomore Jill Altknecht, a supporter of the Jimmy crusade. "Most people just look at me weird."

general stemmed from opposition to the message.

The message is a simple one, according to Jimmy supporters.

"When people come up to me and ask about my shirt, I tell them who Jimmy is and that we can all have a personal relationship with God through Jesus," said history sophomore Michelle Revious. "I'm rather shy, and I don't want to offend people."

On the opposite end of the issue is history senior Lurinda Dowell, who expressed that she is offended by the T-shirts because the message does not reflect what she believes.

"(The message) contradicts what a lot of other people believe, such as people doing the opposite of what God has planned for us," Dowell said.

Dowell said that everything we do is in God's plan, and that we are not capable of doing otherwise.

Some students are not as opposed to the message as much as the physi-

Peer Health coordinator and CDC agree on study

By Robin Nichols

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

A study released April 27 by the Centers for Disease Control revealed a link between beer prices and occurrences of sexually transmitted diseases. One Cal Poly peer health coordinator agrees that alcohol plays a dangerous role in STDs.

The comparison showed that implementing a tax of 20 cents per six-pack of beer would lead to an approximate 9 percent decrease in the rates of gonorrhea among states and age groups studied.

The study compared STD statistics and state alcohol policies from 1981 to 1995. The main controversy about these findings is whether alcohol price changes would lead to different behaviors among 15- to 24-year-olds, or if the problem stems from something else. Some federal officials said that alcohol is linked to risky behavior and should be taxed. Others argue that the tax would have no effect on drinkers in society, and education is a better method to stop the spread of STDs.

Peer Health coordinator and kinesiology senior Christy Mountin shares the latter opinion.

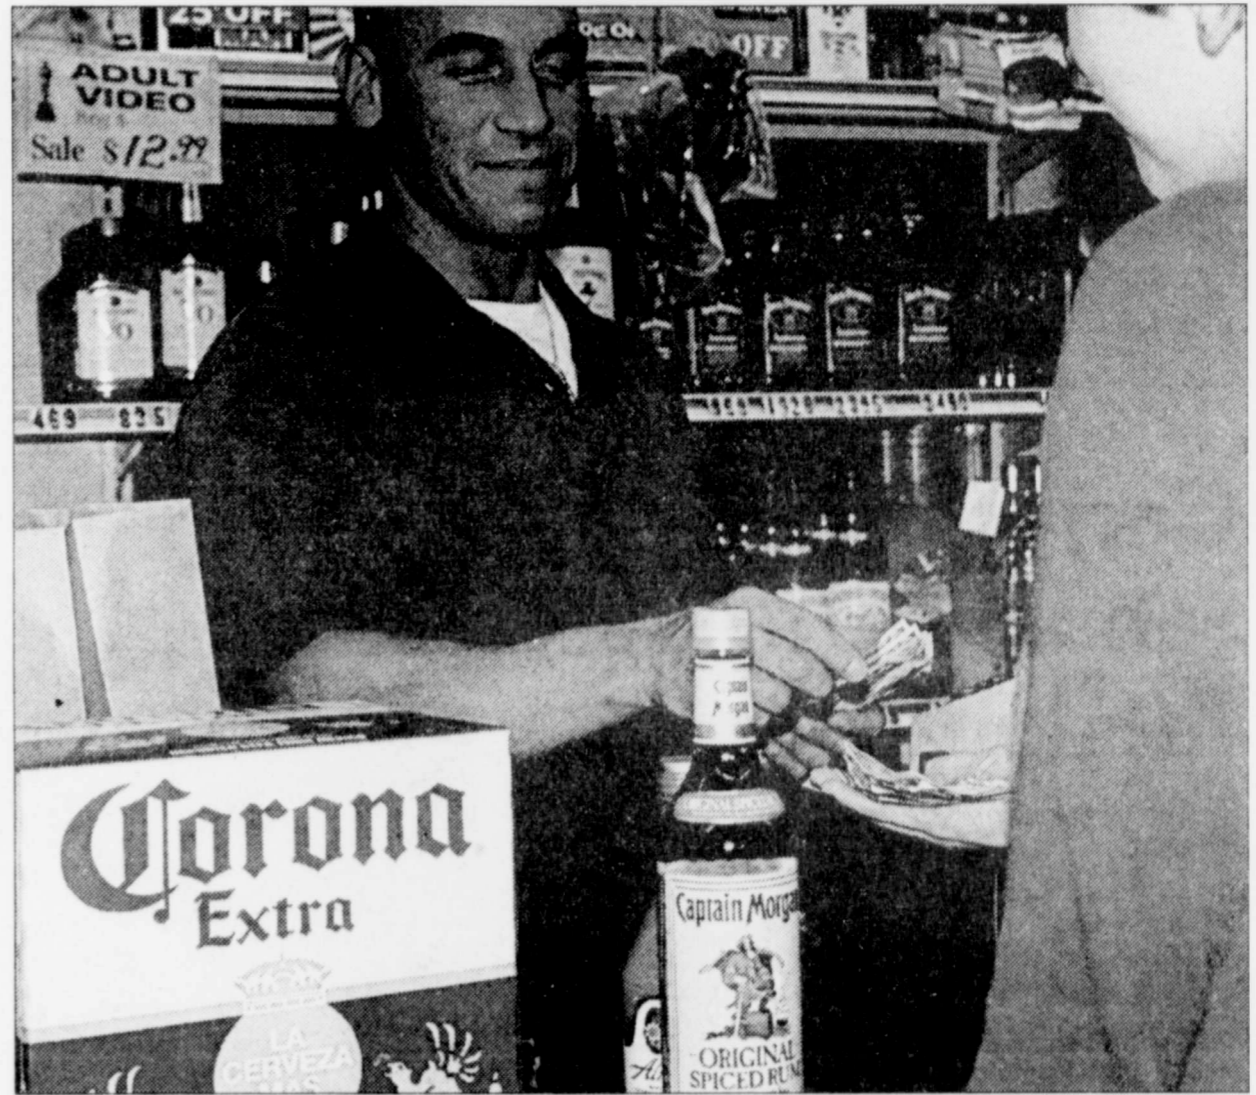

"There's an increase in any kind of problem — sex assault and unsafe sex — with alcohol use. But I think this is just another way to blame unsafe sex on alcohol. (Alcohol) is something that contributes to unsafe practices — but we (need to teach) attitude and education."

The findings of the study are also hard to believe for Cork 'n' Bottle general manager Frank Marez.

"I don't think (the tax) would make a difference," Marez said. "It's hard to say. Supermarkets undercut us so much — by two to three dollars. The 20 cents wouldn't make that big of an impact on customers. We're a small business — we can't afford to do it."

Some students consider the 20-cent tax proposed by the CDC study innocuous and are skeptical that it would change anything.

"I think 20 cents is hardly enough to change how much beer students buy," journalism freshman Natasha Toto said. "People are going to get drunk at parties and have sex no matter what."

cal appearance of the garments.

"The shirts are an eyesore," said nutritional science senior Andrea Byer. "They seem like a good opportunity to jump on a bandwagon."

The yellow tees have sparked some students' creative juices.

Some have shown up to school voicing their reactions by wearing T-shirts of their own.

Shirts with sayings such as "F--- Jimmy," "I beat up Jimmy" and "Jimmy agrees with Satan" are some examples.

Architecture sophomore Morgan Sykes-Jaybush is not a Jimmy follower and wore a red shirt saying "I slept with Jimmy" on the front, followed by "I agree with Lucifer" on the back. He said that a majority of the reactions to his homemade T-shirt have been positive.

"My attack is not on Jimmy himself. It's more to show how ridiculous they are in feeling that they need to let everyone know and show off," Sykes-Jaybush said. "I felt that I had to counteract the masses of people in yellow T-shirts. It seemed like half of the school was following like drones."

enjoy going to meetings, holding campus jobs and spending the majority of each day immersed in club events. They both live the life of relaxation-deprived students.

As a microbiology senior, Smith's trek down the college road has been full of activities such as Week of Welcome and Open House. After four years, he arrived at his current Board of Directors position representing the College of Science and Math.

Smith's recent interest in business law has encouraged him to pursue a career in law after graduation.

"I want to become a patent lawyer for a biotechnology company because I've got a biotechnology/microbiology background," Smith said.

Aborne's college experience has been characterized with minimal sleep and maximum involvement. His involvement with ASI dates back to his freshman year. He currently serves as a College of Engineering representative of the Board of Directors.

Four years ago, Aborne was expecting a relaxing college experience until his involvement with Poly Reps showed him the busier side of campus life.

"If you told me four years ago that I would be sitting at an interview as ASI student body president, I would have laughed you out of the room," Aborne said.

After working with Aborne as his campaign manager, Smith said the two complement each other very well.

"Sam has more incredible ideas than any student leader I know on this campus," Smith said. "I complement him because I can manage; I'm more of the implementor. Sam leads us forward and we take it and run with the ball."

As ASI president, Aborne plans to bring his analytical skills and creative nature to student government. One of his biggest challenges will be trying to convince people that change is good.

"It's not change for the sake of change, it's change with a purpose," Aborne said. "That's one of the things that I'm going to be working on personally: trying to help people see that I'm not there to go after the job - this isn't a power trip for me."

Some of Aborne's plans include the restructuring of the executive officer positions, as well as giving more responsibility to students working in the ASI office.

Smith's relationship with administration through his position on the Open House committee will be beneficial to implementing changes. As Aborne's left hand, Smith's role will be to manage students who report to Aborne and delegate ideas, among other things.

Smith's excitement over winning the role of vice president has just begun to set in.

"It's very weird, too — all of a sudden people congratulate me, and I'm like, 'I haven't done anything yet,'" he said.

The election of Aborne and Smith means representation from areas on campus that were otherwise hidden in the ASI realm, Aborne said.

"I think students have been given their ASI back," Aborne said.

we give them. He also said he had some reservations with joining the WRC.

"The WRC only addresses universitie providers, which is about 1 percent of the clothing industry," Zingg said. "Plus, there are no clothing industry representatives on their board."

History sophomore Art Perez said the WRC does a better job than the FLA because it doesn't have influence coming from other corporations.

"The FLA's board has 15 members and about six of them are held by corporate representatives," Perez said. "The WRC's board is made up of representatives from Human Rights organizations. The WRC is not affected by companies. It's completely independent."

Perez also added that the FLA announces its visits to the factories prior to actually coming.

"That kind of defeats the purpose of surprise checks," Perez said. "The WRC has only been using random spot-checks when visiting factories."

As of May 2, 48 universities and colleges had joined the WRC, including such schools as University of Michigan, Boston College and Brown University. San Francisco State University is a member of the WRC but does not have a code.

Now that Cal Poly has enforced a code establishing principles for its apparel providers to follow, it hopes for other state universities to create their own code also.

"We were the first state university to have a code," Zingg said. "Hopefully other schools will look at us and see how important it is to have a code."

McGowan said the more factories there are, the easier it is for retailers to get the clothing for so cheap.

"There are so many factories and so few retailers," McGowan said. "(The retailers) have the power to dictate the price while the factories are competing with each other to make the clothes."

Political science freshman Ruby Moz said right now the PSA will need a lot of support from the students to get Cal Poly to join the WRC.

Perez said he hopes to raise more awareness and get more student involvement.

"We just have to get the word out there," Perez said.

Campus Projects Update

Master Plan Update

A preliminary draft of Cal Poly's new Master Plan is now available for campus and community review.

The draft plan, designed to balance land uses with enrollment demands for the next 20 years, is the result of two years of deliberation among key campus groups, campus and community task forces, and planning consultants.

Review of the initial document will take place throughout spring quarter, and will be refined and reviewed again next fall and winter. The final Master Plan will be presented to the CSU Board of Trustees for approval in spring 2001, Cal Poly's 100th birthday.

Jimmy is more of a show than reaching out

Bright gold T-shirts have invaded our campus this week, boasting the statement "I agree with Jimmy." What initially appeared to be a political statement and movement turned out to be an evangelistic tactic of our local campus Christian groups. Originally, we had a few praises and a few problems with the Jimmy stuff. But as the week progresses, we are beginning to question its overall integrity.

We agree with some aspects of Jimmy's testimony but not enough to wear the shirt or support the crusade. The idea that faith in Christ means automatic salvation is the problem. We both love Jesus dearly and try as much as we can to live up to his expectations. But we fall short and cannot claim to "be saved," for it is our idea that it is God's playing field, and he can decide who goes to heaven or hell. Thus, the very notion of us being assured of "entering the Kingdom" upon death is ridiculous.

This is not the only reason we are not wearing the shirt. We feel there is extreme exclusion going on. The Jimmy crew claims that all Christian groups were included in the movement. Not so. The Newman Catholic Center is not involved with Jimmy week. Also, Old Mission San Luis Obispo was not notified. We are Catholic and therefore don't feel it is right to restrict such a passionate topic to only select Christian groups.

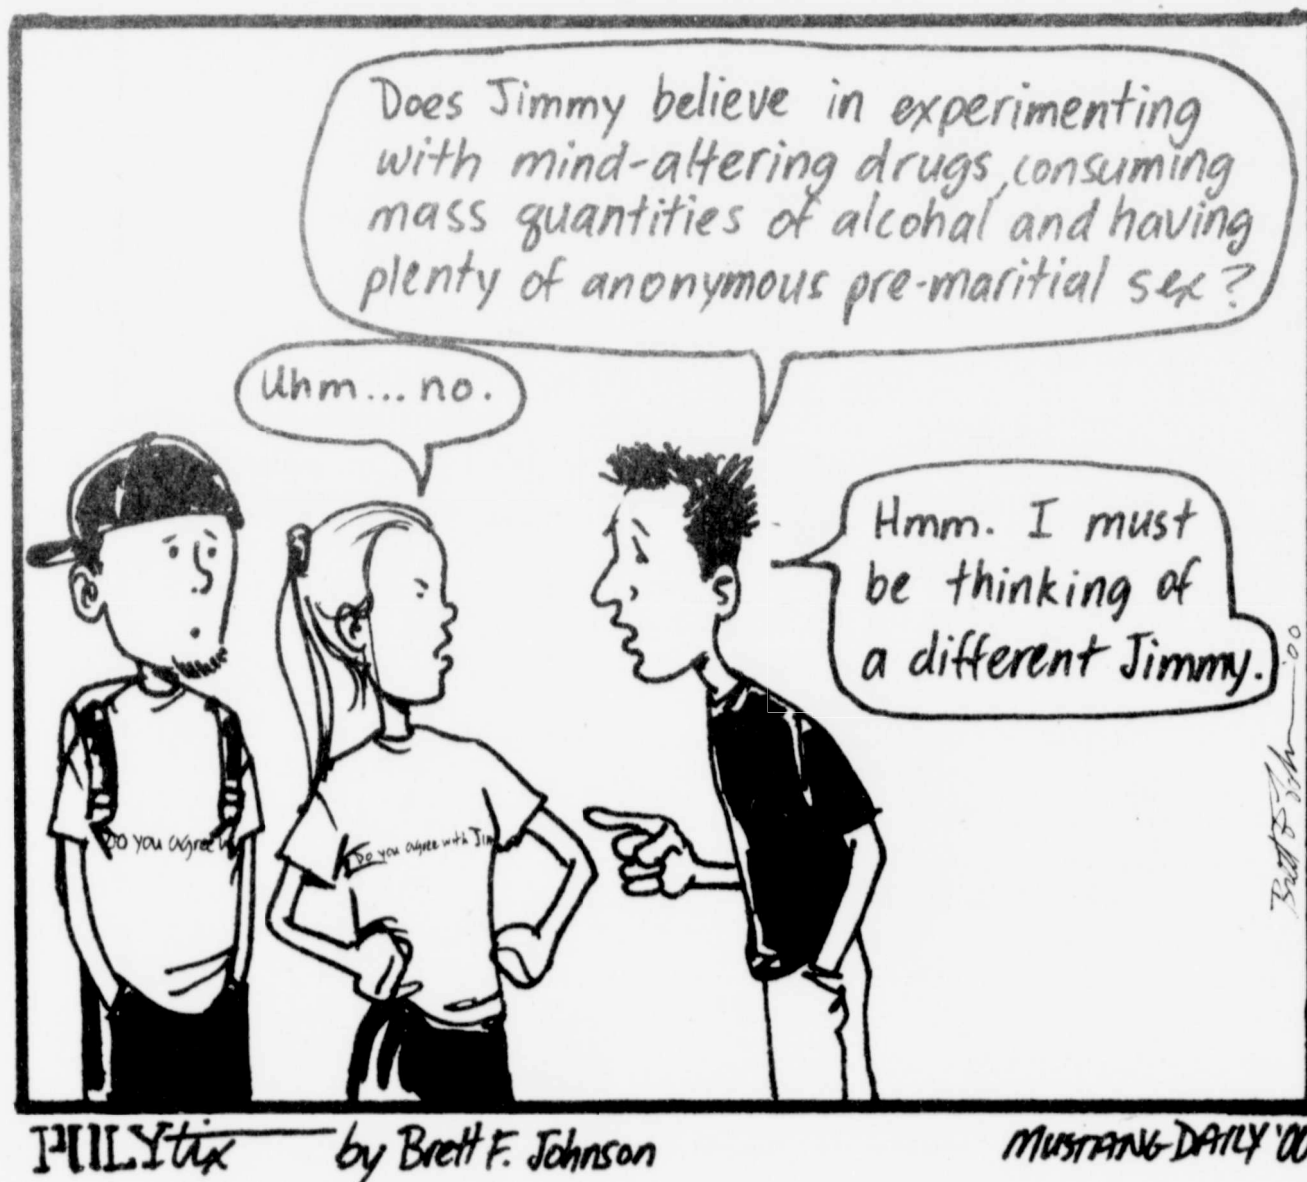

An interesting situation occurred in a class Monday. The instructor stopped his lecture to ask about the Jimmy shirts. There were at least four proud Jimmy supporters in there, but none spoke out. The instructor asked three times and then continued class. The Jimmy supporters had the opportunity of a lifetime as a curious class gave them the spotlight, but no one produced. This makes us and many others wonder if these people are wearing these shirts because they love Christ and want to spread "the Word," or because it is cool and trendy.

Jimmy shirts cost $5 in the University Union. However, one must pass a quiz to buy one. Thus, exclusion once again prevails. How many people are wearing these shirts? Let's be modest and say 100 people. That is $500! It would be great if that money was used and donated to support a charity or given to the poor. Instead of wearing a shirt to be "in" the Christian movement, a "Christian" would have the silent satisfaction of knowing that all the money went directly to a good cause — a real Christian thing to do. Jimmy could still give his speech, and all the people without shirts wouldn't look at the gold with disdain. That is evangelizing — loving and giving without boasting. We are not certain where the money will go; it may very well go to charity, but the shirts do have a price.

Many non-Christian students we have spoken to about Jimmy are not appreciative. A lot of people feel many Christians boast of going to heaven and can easily point to those who will go to hell. This entails an air of elitism. Since there is a bad taste in many people's mouths, the Jimmy gold is resented more. This does not help the cause.

Thus, I suggest that Christianity as a whole needs to be more tolerant of non-Christian beliefs and not set itself above anyone else, whether through speech or clothing. We do not hate the Jimmy cause, for its goal is excellent. However, it is not the most tactful of measures. As Catholic Christians, we feel the real evangelizing is through works of love and not force-fed ethics. Therefore, let us next time consider the things that most appeal to others. Who knows, if we Christians practiced what we preached rather than creating a show, there might be a whole lot more attraction.

Letters to the editor

Yellow shirts help signal who to avoid on campus

Editor,

What's this? Do my eyes deceive me? Did one of Cal Poly's own yellow Christian sheep actually write, "Being in college, we should all be mature enough to co-exist with something we don't agree with," and in the same letter question why so many are upset that our campus is overrun with fundamentalist Christians who, on a daily basis, burden themselves with trying to convert the non-Christians?

My dear Christian Burtt, I understand it angers you that someone knocked over your Jimmy sign. People are responding openly and angrily to the latest campaign that questions the values of others. But look at it from our point of view. Fliers advocating Christianity litter Cal Poly year-around. I can hardly walk through the University Union anymore without getting a stomach ache from the epitome of ignorance condensed into a yellow blob at an institute of higher learning.

I am absolutely flabbergasted that you say, "Those of us wearing yellow shirts don't think we are better than anyone else" as you continuously try to convert students. If you actually believe that you are no better than anyone else, why are you trying to change people to be like you? I believe in a higher power and my spirituality is a result of my own personal life experiences. Each time I am approached by a Bible fanatic trying to tell me that my concept of the universe is incorrect, I am insulted, in the same way the you are insulted when people knock over your signs. I came to college to open my mind, and if I were to join your mob and condemn homosexuals, take cheap shots at evolution and belittle the ideals and beliefs of my peers, I would be doing just the opposite.

Historically, the church has a pretty poor track record. Countless heinous acts have been committed by people who claim they are acting on behalf of the will of God. You're only fooling yourself if you actually believe that the objective of the Jimmy campaign is just to "make people curious about God." I've been subject to religious harassment long enough at Cal Poly to be well aware that you are not trying to make people curious about God but to make vulnerable people accept the cookie-cutter beliefs you push on them by telling them that they are hell-bound if they don't change their ways.

Don't pretend to be surprised that you are pissing off a lot of people. You wore the shirts. You put up the signs. You took the first punch. I realize that you honestly believe you are doing good by attempting "to turn lost students into Christ-centered laborers." Well, many of us are not in fact lost. We are adults who can think for ourselves. Expect us to be angry when you try to tell us otherwise.

For those of you who are as upset as myself because you have to put up with religious harassment a public university, there is a good side to Jimmy week. The shirts stick out like yellow traffic warning signs and let us know who to avoid.

Jesse Francis is an industrial engineering junior.

Jimmy gimmick turns off those it seeks to engage

Editor,

Let me start off by saying I don't agree with Jimmy. I don't agree with using cheap gimmicks to propagate religious agendas — and let's face it, "Jimmy" is a gimmick. Although not as abrasive as those crazy born-again who occasionally invade the University Union, the Jimmy campaign succeeds in annoying and alienating non-Christians. If I wanted to learn more about the Christian faith, I could easily find those willing to share their views with me. Instead, Campus Crusade believes non-Christians need to be surrounded and constantly assaulted with biblical propaganda. Why not let people explore their own spirituality without cheapening the experience with lame slogans?

Steve Connell is an industrial technology sophomore.

All my Sons

Cal Poly Theatre & Dance's Final
1999-2000 Season Production

Joe Keller is living the American Dream. He has a loving wife, Kate, and two grown sons, Chris and Larry. Family is what drives Joe — anything can be justified as long as it is for the benefit of his family.

But what defines family? How deep is Joe's allegiance to his family? These and other timeless ethical questions are being answered in Arthur Miller's "All My Sons," the Cal Poly theatre and dance department's final performance of the 1999-2000 season.

Miller, best known for the American classics "Death of a Salesman" and "The Crucible," constructed "All My Sons" around Keller, a Midwestern manufacturer accused of selling defective parts to the Air Force during World War II. The defective parts result in the death of 21 pilots, and the play deals with the ramifications of this truth come forward.

"Arthur Miller has a profound statement to make about how we should behave in our own families and in the larger world," director Pamela Malkin said. "But he doesn't create a speech to do that — he creates interestingly flawed, believable, sometimes funny and sometimes dramatic characters to get that message across."

Graphic communications senior Brett Johnson is Joe Keller, and theatre arts senior Lara Black plays his wife, Kate. Both actors are playing characters in their 50s, a difficult task.

"Kate is really complex ... her emotions are very controlled and subtle," Black said. "So it's difficult to show tons of emotion. The hardest part is trying to be in my 50s."

Eldest son Chris Keller is played by recent business graduate James D'Albora. Theatre arts sophomore Amanda Sitko plays Ann Deever, the daughter of Keller's betrayed colleague.

Wildflower rocks the jocks with local entertainment

By Kimberly Tahsuda

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Unique sounds of jazz, funk, ska and rock filled the air last weekend at the 18th annual Wildflower Triathlon.

Members of more than 40 Cal Poly clubs and organizations who made up the event's volunteer staff had a chance to get their groove on thanks to arrangements made by the Wildflower committee. Four local bands provided the entertainment.

Business junior Kelley Pedrick attended the event at Lake Nacimiento as a guest.

"The Wildflower committee did a great job in picking the bands that played," Pedrick said. "A variety of music was represented that really got the crowd moving."

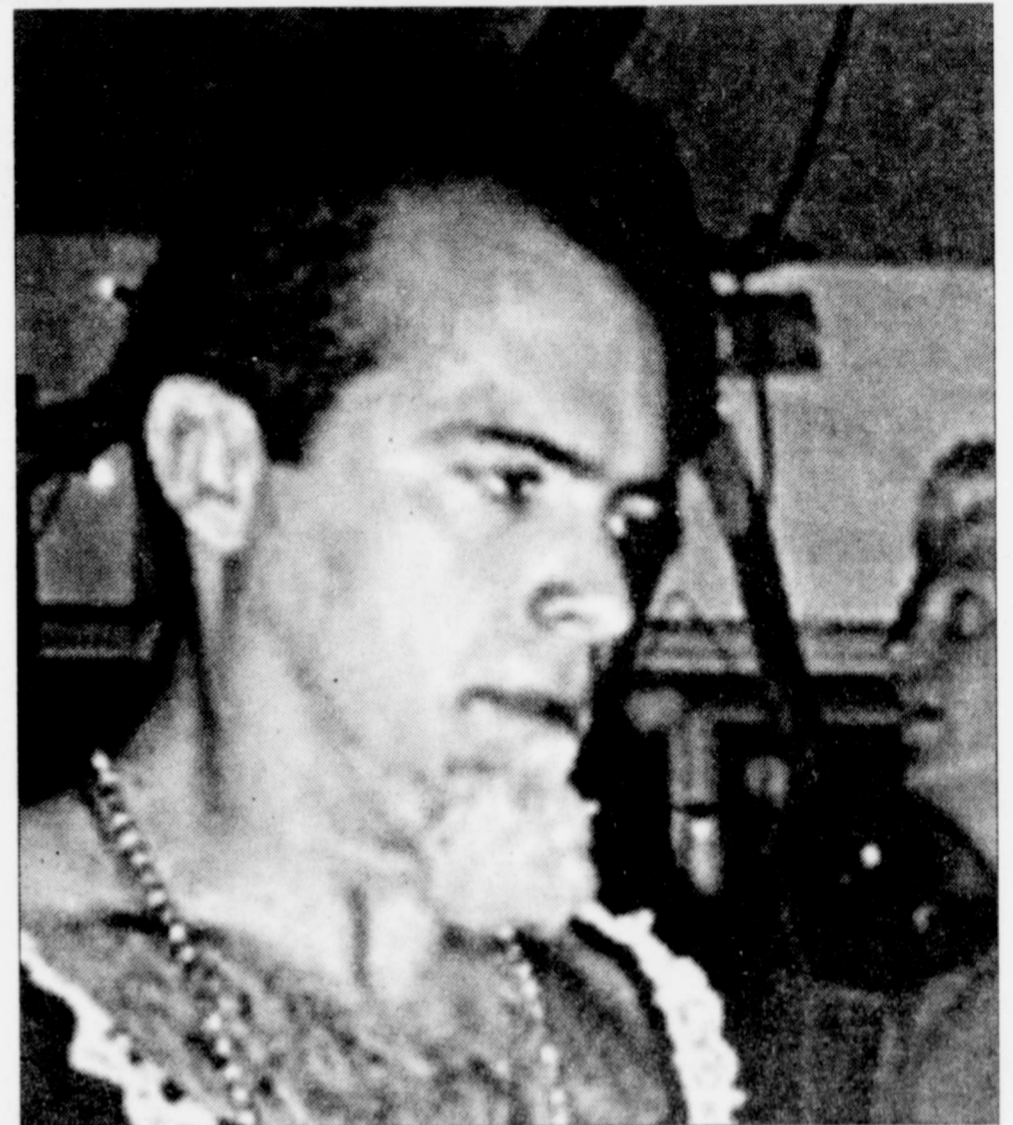

Entertainment committee head Chris Klayko said Jester's Dead, Surefire, Uncle Beezus, and Dusk were chosen from 14 bands that submitted demo tapes.

"A good variety of music was represented," Klayko said. "We felt the crowd would enjoy it."

Friday, the punk rock style of Surefire kicked off the festivities. Their upbeat tempo set a party mood for the weekend. Later, the mellow soul/jazz sound of Uncle Beezus finished off the evening with mostly instrumental jams.

Volunteers and guests strutted their stuff in swimwear Saturday afternoon at an impromptu bikini contest. Entertainment committee head Chris Giese said the event was spur of the moment and was not arranged by the entertainment committee.

"Two or three guys asked if they could use the stage," Giese said. "They rallied together all the par-

SLO wind orchestra pays homage to Mom

By Karin Driesen
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

On Sunday, the newly formed San Luis Obispo Wind Orchestra will perform a concert for those special people in our lives known as Mom.

With music ranging from folk songs to a dramatic piece based on a child abuse experience to Tchaikovsky, the performance is sure to appeal to a wide variety of tastes.

Not only is this Mother's Day concert filled with great music, it is being performed by a unique group of 50 musicians.

The wind orchestra, formed in December 1999, is the first of its kind in San Luis Obispo. Conductor William Johnson described it as "the wind and percussion version of the SLO Symphony."

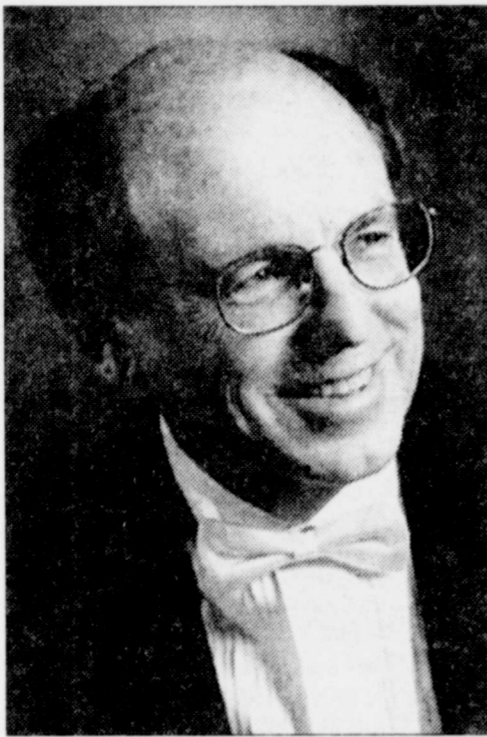

"We're modeling ourselves after the SLO Symphony," Johnson said. "Thirty or 40 years ago they were struggling, too."

Now, he said, the symphony has grown tremendously, and there are waiting lists for season tickets. Not only has it grown in size, but it has grown in stature, as seen by the modern facility it is now able to play in, which is Cal Poly's Performing Arts Center.

This growth is a great thing, Johnson said, but the symphony still only needs about 20 wind players.

"That group can only use a small number of wind players," he said. "What about all of the other wind players in San Luis Obispo who can't get into the symphony?"

This dilemma caused Johnson, a Cal Poly music instructor since 1966, to start a new group along with several others, comprised of brass, percussion and woodwind musicians.

WILLIAM JOHNSON:
SLO Wind Orchestra Conductor.

"We're filling that community need, and they're outstanding musicians," he said.

The 50 musicians are local residents. About five are students, but the rest play music professionally or play instruments in addition to another career.

Some of the other founding members include Dr. Robert Danielson, a surgeon, clarinet player and former SLO Symphony president; and Ed Simonsen, oboe player and past president of Bakersfield College.

Students, such as construction management junior Chris Anderson, said they enjoy being able to play with older and more experienced musicians.

"These people are very serious about their music," Anderson said. "And since the group only practices the five weeks before a performance, you really have to practice the music on your own so you can be prepared to play with the rest of the group."

Anderson said he joined the group to play more challenging and interesting music.

Most of the music performed by the group is specially composed for wind orchestras. In fact, Johnson said, there is a lot of music that is written specifically for such groups.

Sunday's concert includes American folk songs such as "Old Home Days" by Charles Ives and "Shenandoah" by Frank Ticheli. Other pieces are the grandiose and fanfarish "St. Martin Suite" by Jan Van der Roost and Robert Russell Bennett's flashy "Symphonic Songs for Band." Also to be performed is Fisher Tull's "Sketches on a Tudor Psalm," a high-level, contemporary work for wind orchestras.

The biggest piece of the day is Mark Camphouse's "Watchman, Tell Us of the Night." It was written to recognize and honor young people who have survived child abuse. Johnson said it uses sounds one would hear children making, followed by very emotional music.

"It gets very grotesque and horrible-sounding, then it gets very victorious and emotional," he said.

The concert ends on a big note with Tchaikovsky's "Dance of the Jesters," a high-spirited, fast-moving piece.

The May 14 concert starts at 3 p.m. in Harman Hall at the Performing Arts Center. Tickets are $12 and can be purchased online at www.pacslo.org, by phone at 756-2787 or at the PAC ticket office. Children 8 years old and younger get in free.

Local band sets its sights on national fame

It is in my opinion that Bootsie Merango should be everyone's favorite party band. First of all, they're versatile; when I saw them play a couple weeks ago at the Earth Day festival downtown, they were in the middle of Led Zeppelin's hard-rocking "Immigrant Song." Then they changed gears into their own blend of reggae/rock/ska. Second, and more importantly, they're just plain fun.

"We're all about the same age, we're all in the same frame of mind, and we all emphasize having a good time," said singer Lopaka Jones.

Bootsie Merango stickers started appearing in San Luis Obispo around October of 1998. Soon after, they released their first full-length CD, "Baked Fresh Daily." The album originally started out as a two-song demo that the band could keep for themselves and give to their friends, but when the songs kept coming, they decided to make it full-length.

The members of the band come from varied musical backgrounds. Jones was part of a choir when he was younger, and even sang classical music at Carnegie Hall in New York when he was 15 years old. Bassist Dave Abbot's roots are totally different — he comes from metal. Jones also added that he and the others have played in '80s rock cover bands that sounded like The Clash and everything else in between. Other members include Mark Iseman on guitar, Paul Knupp on keyboards, Gary Boullion on drums and Justin Perkins on percussion.

"We don't like to limit ourselves in the music we listen to or the music we play," Jones said. "As long as we have fun playing it, and it's somewhat 'danceable,' we'll play it."

"We don't like to limit ourselves in the music we listen to or the music we play."

Lopaka Jones
singer for Bootsie Merango

Things are happening quickly for Bootsie Merango. This September, they're headed to the East Coast for a monthlong tour, sponsored by surf/skate company HardCloud. Jones knows people involved with HardCloud from his days as a professional surfer (a passion the rest of the band also shares). Eastern Surf magazine is doing an article on Jones' overseas surfing exploits and at-home Bootsie Merango adventures.

If you want to catch Bootsie Merango before they're nationally known, you'd better act soon. Their CD is being played on college stations across the nation and sold at surf shops in far-flung places like New York and Virginia Beach. A Bootsie Merango sign was even spotted on MTV's Total Request Live, Jones said.

Friday night, Bootsie Merango is playing in San Diego at Winston's Beach Club, opening for Government Worn. You can catch them in this county at the Paso Robles Wine Festival on May 20. On May 25th, check 'em out at Mother's Tavern. Also stop by their Web site at www.bootsiemerango.com.

SONS

"(Chris) is kind of an idealist and he wants his family, his friends, everyone to be happy — and he just can't seem to do it," D'Albora said.

"All My Sons" takes place inside a unit set, meaning the entire play occurs in one location — the Keller's backyard. This poses an interesting challenge for the actors and actresses, who are forced to drive the play with their energy instead of depending on dramatic scene changes to draw in the audience.

"The audience has to listen and feel what we are talking about," D'Albora said. "It is a big challenge for them because almost every line is important to what goes on in the play."

Although the play takes place in 1947, the message applies to people of all ages, Malkin said.

"The message of the play transcends the 1940s in that it is eminently applicable to anyone, particularly college students who are about to thrust themselves into the larger world," she said.

Malkin, associate theater and dance department head, chose the play due to its lasting words and themes.

"Miller was very interesting in blending personal and social responsibilities in his plays," she said. "This is a 'message play' in the sense that it has a profound statement to make about where our human responsibilities lie."

The play poses ethical questions and lets the audience feel the characters, Malkin said.

"Sometimes in college we forget that we're responsible to anyone else and we concentrate on ourselves so much," Black said. "This play is going to broaden a lot of people's horizons."

"All My Sons" opens tonight at the Cal Poly Theatre. It will run through Saturday and continues next week, May 18-20 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 for the general public and $7 for students and seniors, and are available at the Performing Art Center's Ticket Office. Call 756-2787 for more information.

Wildflower. Giese said the band was invited back to play after receiving such a great audience response last year.

"The crowd really got into the music during Jester's Dead," business senior Emily Turner said. "I wished the band would have played later because everyone was having a great time. Ten was too early for the music to end."

Jester's Dead drew the largest crowd of the weekend. Although there was a bit of moshing and rowdiness while the band played, the crowd was contained.

"There was a whole committee dedicated to security during the entertainment," Giese said. "They did a great job; nothing was out of control."

Security committee head Derek Marin said the entertainment committee blocked off the back stage, and a line of volunteers created a barricade between the crowd and the stage.

"The students maintained a cool attitude toward the event," Marin said. "We were there mainly (in case) someone got hurt. Everything went smoothly."

Marin said the only disruption was a beer can that flew through the air when Jester's Dead played.

Overall, both Giese and Klayko were happy with the entertainment.

"I feel the entertainment went over extremely well," Klayko said. "It was the best it has ever been."

Letters to the editor

Remember freedom from religion when sharing your beliefs

Editor,

Am I the only person who has been reminded this week of the Heavens Gate cult by all of these people wearing the same annoying yellow shirt? I try to be a "live and let live" person, but I am sick to death of being recruited by Christians on this campus. It has happened to me personally so many times I have lost count. Want to come to a "coffee"? Want to come to a "barbecue"? Or my personal favorite, just the flat-out, "Want to come to my church?"

Christian zealots come to my house on the weekends and interrupt my precious time off without any invitation, and then act surprised when I am angry at such rude invasions into my personal space. It's always the same old tired routine: "We are not recruiting, we just want to talk about our beliefs."

A perfect example is the letter in Tuesday's Mustang Daily ("Yellow shirts are not a fashion statement"). The guy says he is not about recruiting, yet spends half of his letter telling us how he knows God's plan for all of us. Who are you, sir, to assume you know anything about me? You assume your belief system is superior to mine in the very tone of your letter.

Not only does the Constitution guarantee freedom of religion, it guarantees freedom from it! If you all want to run off and have meetings, dress the same, drink Kool-Aid or whatever it is that you do, that is your right, BUT LEAVE ME ALONE!

Even though I have different beliefs than Christianity, I would never assume to try and talk a person out of their beliefs. Do the silent majority at Cal Poly a favor and do the same.

Scott Underwood is an electrical engineering senior.

Jimmy week brings many benefits to Poly

Editor,

I have been looking forward to Jimmy week for a while, but I had no idea how great it would be! Let me share some of the advantages so far. I get dressed much quicker every morning because I do not waste any time deciding what to wear. I got to prolong doing laundry for a whole week, and it only cost me $5 for the shirt. I got to learn how many Jimmys there are on this campus. I actually got an opinion article published (you're reading it now). And I got to share with people the most important thing in my life and hear from them what they believe. I love when I get to hear about someone and find out what they believe, what they are living for. So many times our conversation never rises above how wasted we got or how great the weather is. I love shooting the breeze with the best of 'em, but I also love talking about the things of life. The best part about Jimmy week is that it got us talking about life and the things of life. If you can't talk about that in college, then where can you? I often say that Cal Poly is simply a résumé school — meaning the only thing that students care about are their résumés and getting the right job. I have seen this change over the past four years, and I am thankful that we care about so much more than our résumés. If you agree with Jimmy or not, thanks for the conversation, thanks for caring. Jimmy week will end tomorrow, but let's keep talking.

Why not suspend every club that drinks?

Editor,

Thirty-one clubs suspended for 25 years. After a lengthy meeting, Judicial Affairs and the short-timer Vice President of Student Affairs Juan Gonzalez have decided that in light of recent allegations by Mr. Easter Bunny, every club that attended Wildflower will be disbanded. Apparently, there was alcohol present during the two-day triathlon. These "renegade" clubs violated Cal Poly's third-party vendor policy that states if alcohol is present at any club function, it must be distributed by a licensed vender (i.e. bar). Clubs had hired Mother's Tavern, Bull's Tavern and Madison's Bar and Grill to serve all weekend, but those damned college kids drank up all the booze Thursday night.

Gonzalez and Judicial Affairs further found that these "animals" drank and danced all night when they should have been in the library. This was a clear infraction of proper student behavior and an easy decision for the administration. As an institution of higher learning, we cannot tolerate such deviants to participate in this unconscionable, inebriated debauchery.

Also stemming from Wildflower, 312 Cal Poly students are being charged with providing alcohol to minors. Judicial Affairs will be holding a group hearing from 3 to 3:04 p.m. to decide how many years these criminals will be suspended. No attorneys are allowed at the hearing because, "They're smarter than us and might provide some logic to the process."

The district attorney's office dismissed Mr. Bunny's testimony because he is a known liar and was disgruntled that the basket weaving club kicked him out. Cal Poly said, "Who cares about due process and 'innocent until proven guilty' and all that crap? We've been following that basket weaving club and all their cohorts for years now and we want them gone!"

In all seriousness, I've made light of the current suspension of Sigma Chi because that's just what it is — a joke. The double standard that Cal Poly has for the greek system is ridiculous. I've been a part of probably eight to 10 clubs at this school and have consistently witnessed flagrant disregard for the university's alcohol policy. I've seen everything from 12-packs on every seat of a bus to wine tastings at students' houses. The administration has been performing selective enforcement for years, and has effectively reduced the greek population.

The only pending charge Sigma Chi faces is providing alcohol to minors, as all hazing charges were dropped because of downright lies. In his overwhelming generosity, Juan Gonzalez lifted the permanent expulsion imposed by Judicial Affairs and imposed a meager 25-year suspension — 25 years for something that many clubs and individuals do week in and week out.

Jeremy Kreck is an ag business senior.

Sigma Chi punishment prejudiced, outrageous

Editor,

Once again the vice president of Student Affairs hands down an outrageous punishment to a fraternity for giving alcohol to a minor in college. Mr. Gonzalez has discriminated against greek organizations since he arrived here and continues to do so on his way out.

He has stipulated that greek organizations cannot take freshmen as new members, but continues to allow any non-greek organization to recruit freshmen. There seems to be no rhyme or reason to his actions other than discrimination and prejudice. There also seems to be no limit to his power, which is what I personally find very disturbing.

If a prejudiced judge has no limits on the sentences he/she could give, a minority caught jay-walking could be sentenced to 25 years in jail. Is this really how Cal Poly's judicial system should operate?

I'm not defending Sigma Chi or Delta Tau's actions; they both broke the law and deserve to be punished. I am disagreeing with what seems to be a ridiculous punishment.

Student Affairs' job is to work WITH students and organizations to make a better campus community, not pick and choose students/organizations to throw out as examples. Working with organizations means taking reasonable actions when they violate rules. I think probation and limited suspension for first-time offenders is a reasonable course of action. Banning an organization for 25 years, enough time so that members' kids can't join, is pretty unreasonable and destructive.

Probation would allow an organization to change its ways and be held accountable for any future problems. This type of remedy seems like a CONSTRUCTIVE one. A five- to six-year suspension would effectively rid the school of any of the offenders for extreme cases. Where does 25 years of suspension come into this picture?

At Wildflower last weekend, just about every campus organization in attendance violated the law by serving alcohol to minors. I'm not going to name anyone, because I don't want Mr. Gonzalez to launch his witch hunt on them. I think my point is clear, though. This is not a greek-specific problem; it's a college problem and greeks should not be the scapegoats for the school. Mr. Gonzalez, I cannot say I am sad to see you go, but I wish you the best of luck in your new job and hope you learn from your mistakes here at Cal Poly.

Knight's fate to be decided by trustees Sunday

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana University trustees will meet again behind closed doors Sunday, apparently to decide whether to expand the investigation of charges against basketball coach Bob Knight.

University president Myles Brand in March appointed two trustees to look into allegations that Knight grabbed former player Neil Reed by the throat during a 1997 practice. Since then, other incidents have been reported in what one source close to the investigation called "a feeding frenzy."

"It's hard to separate truth from fiction sometimes," said the source, who spoke Wednesday on condition of anonymity. "That's part of the problem here. I think there's just a lot of misinformation. It's difficult sorting through everything."

Indianapolis television station WRTV on Tuesday quoted unidentified sources as saying the trustees heard new accusations against Knight at a board meeting last week.

One unidentified trustee was quoted by WRTV as saying the charges were "pretty ugly stuff."

Indiana athletics director Clarence Doninger told The Associated Press on Wednesday that "various things" unrelated to Reed have been reported since Reed's charges were made public in March.

"Whether the trustees discussed those or not, I don't know. I guess I had always thought that as they went through this review there would be some discussion of other things, but I don't know that for a fact," Doninger said.

The trustees met in a closed executive session last Thursday during a regularly scheduled board meeting. At that time, there had been no investigation beyond Reed, another source told the AP.

"I can't confirm or deny the stories were told ... back room, gossip-type stuff ... but I can tell you there was a real good, thorough investigation of Neil Reed's allegations," said the source, who also spoke on condition of anonymity.

John Walda, the trustees' president, and Frederick Eichhorn, a trustee and former president of the Indiana State Bar Association, were appointed by Brand to investigate the accusation by Reed, who transferred from Indiana in 1997. The two also are investigating claims that Knight once kicked Brand out of a practice and also showed players a piece of soiled toilet paper, saying that's what their practice resembled.

The WRTV report said Eichhorn and Walda told the board several of the people they interviewed volunteered new information, including accusations unrelated to Reed. Walda did not immediately return a telephone message seeking comment left at his office in Fort Wayne.

Eichhorn, contacted at his office in Gary, said he would not comment until the investigation was completed.

Knight, who was out of town Wednesday, denied the original allegations. Brand has said he was never told to leave practice, and university vice president Christopher Simpson, who has been Brand's spokesman during the investigation, refused to comment on the WRTV report.

"The investigation is continuing, and we anticipate it being completed well within the parameters of mid-June," Simpson said of the 90-day deadline originally announced by Brand.

"There was an executive session which was announced publicly during the trustee meetings last week, but I can't comment on what they may or may not have talked about in executive session. They don't have to elaborate on what the discussion's about," Simpson said. "It could be a personnel issue, it could be a contractual issue, things like that."

One of the two sources who spoke to the AP on condition of anonymity said he would welcome an expanded investigation of Knight.

"I don't have any problem with expanding it, as long as we're looking at something that might reasonably be expected to result in some hard facts," he said. "There are stories out there. I can tell you there are stories out there."

Knight "may have done some really rotten things, and he may end up paying a penalty for that. But it's not fair for trustees, who are the jury in this case, to speculate on what may or may not be true," he said.

The other source took issue with parts of the WRTV report.

"It was almost like somebody was speculating what happened, rather than knew what happened," he said. "I don't know who their source was."

Debbie Bush, news director at WRTV, said the station stood by its report.

"We got our information from one of the trustees and others. He's only one of the sources we got information from," Bush said. "We stand by our story, and we have had several confirmations."

lasted just two innings after surrendering five walks — all with two outs. The big blow came in the second inning, when with two outs and no one on base, Morton hit Austin Evans and walked Woody Cliffords. That set the table for No. 3 hitter Danny Garcia, who delivered a big three-run home run to left-center. It gave the Waves a 4-1 lead.

Pepperdine, who had won eight of its last 10 entering the game, scored three more runs off reliever Nathan Choate and two off Kevin Correia, giving the Waves a 9-1 lead in the sixth inning.

In the first inning, with two outs and a runner on third, the Mustangs tied the game at 1 on a Jason Barringer single to left. It was the Mustangs' only run of the game.

The Mustangs had other opportunities to score and get back in the game but couldn't find any timely hitting.

In the fourth inning, Barringer and Kevin Tillman started the inning off with singles, giving the Mustangs runners on first and third with no outs. Pepperdine starter Steve Schenewerk retired the next three Mustang batters to get out of the jam. The Mustangs put runners on first and second in the next inning but were again unable to score.

Tillman and Barringer led the Mustangs with two hits each.

The Mustangs travel to New Mexico State this weekend for a three-game series with the last-place Aggies (18-31, 3-21). The Mustangs will finish their season with a three-game series at San Luis Obispo Stadium the following weekend. They will take on UC Santa Barbara, who is currently tied for fourth with the Mustangs.

49ERS

But the fact is, Walsh said, Young is under contract with the 49ers.

"But we're going to have to think long and hard about whether he should take the field for the 49ers," he said. "And we're going to have to hear from Steve about whether he wants to play for the 49ers or if he would like to become a free agent."

San Francisco coach Steve Mariucci said he finds it curious that Denver is the only team identified as being interested in Young.

"If Steve Young were ever available, there probably would be a lot of teams that would have an interest," Mariucci said. "If that's true, other teams have used restraint and have kept quiet and done things the way it's supposed to be, the wait-and-see approach."

Baseball smashed by Pepperdine

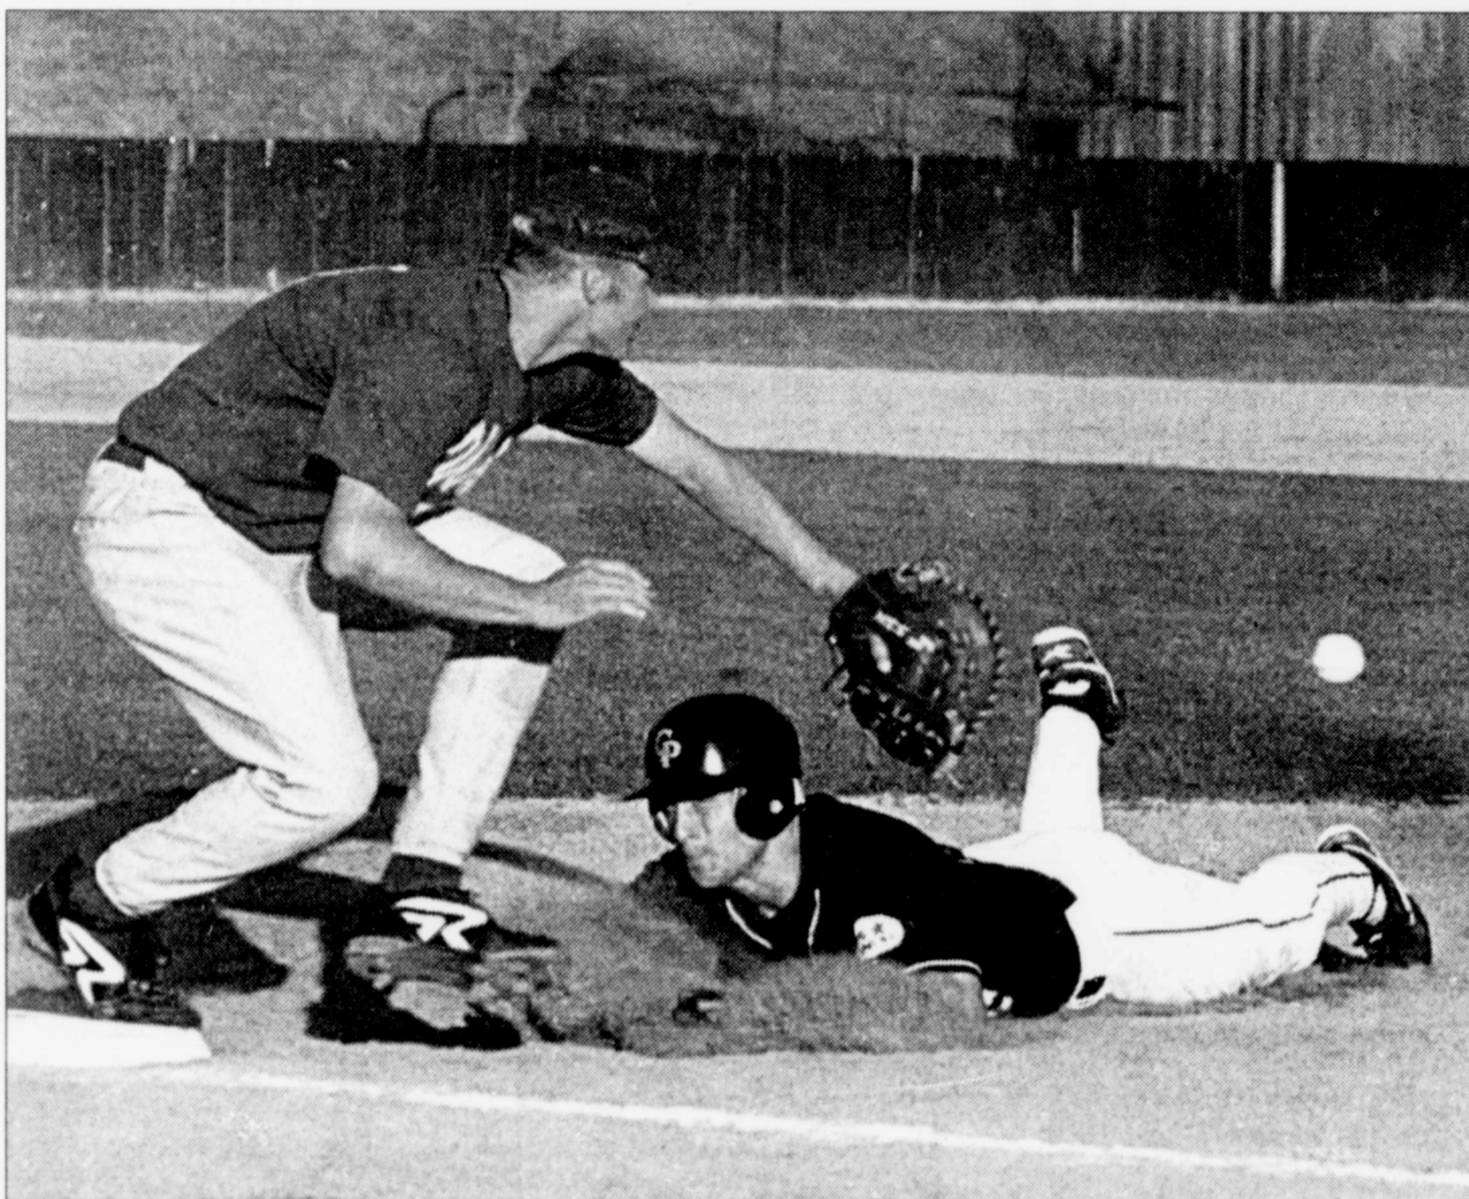

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF REPORT

The Mustangs were plagued by walks as they had their eight-game winning streak snapped, losing 10-1 to Pepperdine at San Luis Obispo Stadium Tuesday evening. It was the final non-conference game of the year for Cal Poly.

The Mustangs, fresh off a critical three-game sweep of Sacramento State Monday, played like a tired team. The Mustangs hurt themselves with seven walks, three hit batsmen and a lack of timely hitting that they have displayed so many times this year.

For the Mustangs, who fall to 28-22 overall, the six remaining Big West games are of more importance than this loss since a third-place finish in the Big West should get Cal Poly its first Division I NCAA Regional bid. A win against West Coast Conference champion Pepperdine (34-20) would have given more credibility to the Mustangs' case for an at-large bid. The Mustangs did beat the Waves earlier in the year, 7-4 at Pepperdine.

Walsh says Broncos tampered with Young

DENVER (AP) — San Francisco 49ers general manager Bill Walsh says his team has been contacted by the NFL about the Denver Broncos' possibly tampering with quarterback Steve Young.

Walsh said the league was "very sensitive to it in this case. The league is watching it closely," the Denver Rocky Mountain News reported Wednesday.

There has been widespread speculation that Denver coach Mike Shanahan would like to acquire Young, a two-time NFL MVP. Young has been considering his future in football after a series of concussions.

49ers officials have said their doctors must clear Young before he returns to action.

NFL tampering rules prevent coaches from having any contact with players under contract with other teams. Young, 38, is still under contract to San Francisco.

NFL spokesman Greg Aiello denied the league was watching the Broncos. "There is no Steve Young issue that we are monitoring," Aiello said.

Shanahan and Broncos owner Pat Bowlen haven't said anything publicly about acquiring Young. Speculation, though, has been widespread.

Quarterback Gus Frerotte, who left Detroit for Denver earlier this year, has said Shanahan "was flat straight out with me" about his interest in signing Young if he was available.

Young played for the Broncos coach when Shanahan was the 49ers offensive coordinator from 1992-1994.

Walsh said he understood why Denver would be interested in Young.

"I know Denver is just a player or two away from another Super Bowl," Walsh said. "I understand Mike Shanahan's relationship with Steve Young. He's among the coaches Steve's worked with and I think I can speak for Steve having great regard for Mike, as I do."

Roadrunners score with 'Goals for Life'

By Shannon Akins

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

The San Luis Obispo Roadrunners aren't merely scoring goals for the home team.

Last Friday, more than 100 pairs of soccer shoes were collected at their soccer game in Mustang Stadium for a program called "Goals for Life."

The Roadrunners joined forces with Promega Biosciences to give out soccer shoes to needy children in different corners of the world.

"We had a box 4 feet by 2 feet by 2 feet that was nearly full," said Larry Smyth, general manager of the Roadrunners. "In general, it was well-received. We want to continue this momentum throughout the season."

The Roadrunners collect shoes at their games from fans and Promega ships them to children throughout the globe once a month.

For every pair of soccer shoes donated at a game, the Roadrunners give that person a dollar off admission to the match.

"I never went to a soccer game before in my life," said Gregory Frank of Promega. "It (the May 5 game) was a lot of fun."

At every home game there is a drop-off point for donations of soccer equipment.

"I know there's a lot more (soccer) shoes buried in closets out there," Smyth said. "Even if you're not interested in the game, come down and donate shoes."

The program also pays attention to local needs, and will help children in this area if necessary.

Tim Lundell, a consultant to Promega, brought the program to the Central Coast after he visited an orphanage in Mexico. The children there were completely destitute, he said.

"They didn't have anything," Frank said. "Not even soccer balls. We can't solve all their problems, but we can help in this small way."

		Brief Bonds splashes two more in McCovey Cove SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Barry Bonds, the only major leaguer to hit a ball into San Francisco Bay, now has done it three times. Bonds' 13th and 14th homers of the season, both solo shots, splashed into McCovey Cove behind right field, and the San Francisco Giants defeated the St. Louis Cardinals 4-3 Wednesday. Bonds' second homer, leading off the eighth against Heathcliff Slocumb (0-2), broke a 3-3 tie. Fans who came to new Pacific Bell Park wondering whether Mark McGwire could hit a ball into the giant mitt beyond the left-field bleachers saw Bonds steal the show. "Big Mac can hit them farther than any man alive, or dead," Giants manager Dusty Baker said. "But Barry can hit them as consistently as anyone."
