Controversy swirls around IT dept, OCOB

► Industrial technology department requests move from Orfalea College of Business to College of Ag

By Emily Wong

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

The Cal Poly Industrial Technology Department, a part of the Orfalea College of Business, is facing changes that will affect students, faculty and the administration.

The IT department has requested the major be removed from the OCOB and reorganized in the College of Agriculture. Cal Poly President Warren Baker declined to comment on unconfirmed reports that he is reviewing this request. He directed questions to Provost Paul Zingg.

Zingg could not be reached for comment by press time.

IT students and faculty cited communication problems, budget concerns, faculty retention and philosophical differences as reasons for the request to leave the OCOB.

The College of Agriculture was chosen as the most likely choice to house the department because it maintains the same production-operation management capacity, said Industrial Technology Society president and IT senior Brad Lear.

College of Agriculture Dean David Wehner was not immediately available to comment.

"There seems to be a poor relationship between the IT department and the College of Business," said IT professor Rod Hoadley.

Lear sent an e-mail to the 350 students in the IT department soliciting help in forming an action committee to tackle "offensive activity" in the department.

About 50 students attended the first

The project, done for professor Michael Miller's intermedia art class, was done for Hunger and Homelessness Awareness Week. The 11 mattresses, decreasing in quality from the top of the stairs to the bottom, were designed to tell students not to take what they have for granted and to bring awareness to the issue of homelessness. Sign ups for the fast will take place all day at Dexter Lawn and from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the UU Plaza.

Poly offers first joint doctorate program

By Stacey Dorning

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Cal Poly and University of California, Santa Barbara made history this week when they announced the Central Coast's first joint doctorate program.

The Cal Poly University Center for Teacher Education and UCSB's Gevirtz Graduate School of Education will offer a Doctor of Education degree program in educational leadership. Students in the program will start classes in the fall.

This is the first doctorate program to be offered at Cal Poly. The program consists of three years and two quarters of continuous enrollment, with classes being held at both Cal Poly and UCSB.

"When you can bring these two scientific research.

The day-long colloquium begins with a three-body student panel discussing various philosophical topics.

Philosophy senior and philosophy club president Jeremy Dickinson will lead the forum and present his speech titled "Kant's Rescue of Metaphysics."

The speech consists of all subjective information and no critical analysis will be presented.

"Often philosophy seems distant in everyday life, but in fact it is relevant in all practices of life," Dickinson said. "When students come to the event, they will realize philosophy is relevant in everyday life."

Philosophy senior Michael Swanson's speech titled "Plantinga's Warranted Christian Belief" will explore if Jesus Christ was a feminist.

"I (will be) making a case that Jesus was indeed a feminist during his lifetime," Swanson said. "I'll use specific scriptural examples to prove my case."

Swanson said he encourages all students interested in gaining more knowledge on unfamiliar topics in philosophy or hearing enlightening discussions to come to the colloquium.

ROTC cadets learn to overcome challenges

By Jenni Mintz

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Daybreak for Reserved Officers Training Core (ROTC) cadets on the Cal Poly campus means starting with a grueling workout at 6 a.m. before classes.

Waking up with the sun is one of the many challenges the ROTC cadets tackle everyday.

ROTC cadets attend physical training five days a week to build strength and endurance.

Physical training, or PT, consists of running, push-ups, sit-ups, pull-ups and a variety of other activities from 6 to 7:15 a.m. After PT, ROTC members either have a military science class or continue their workout like mechanical engineering junior Jon Key.

This is Key's third year in ROTC. He has advanced in ranks to administrative management, S-1, 1st Lieutenant. His duties include organizing events and inviting guests.

"I serve because I enjoy it," Key said. "I've learned so many army values like integrity, loyalty and respect. You have to have values or else you and your group fails. Everything requires working as a team."

For many cadets like Key, the most difficult part about being in ROTC is the time intensive workload from classes and the program.

"Even though I stress out about getting everything done, after a quarter is finished, I feel like I learned so much from the ROTC program that other teachers don't teach," Key said. "Basically, you have responsibility for a lot of people, so it makes you think fast on your feet."

The thrill of achieving personal growth and overcoming challenges is one of the main factors that led animal science senior Kyle

Environmental groups come to symposium

By Meghan Nowakowski
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

The Cal Poly wildlife club will co-sponsor the Environmental Career Symposium at 4 p.m. today in Philips Hall.

Nine representatives from different environmental groups will talk about their professions, educational background and environmental concerns.

Michelle Giolli, wildlife club vice president and ecology and systematic biology senior, said it is important for students to know they can get jobs in environmental fields.

"We really wanted to make people aware that there are a lot of environmental careers out there," Giolli said. "Most of the career fairs that Cal Poly has are more focused on industry, and not what you can do for the environment."

Among the groups presenting will be Tenera Environmental, an environmental monitoring group that does testing and environmental consulting, and El Chorro Regional Outdoor School, which specializes in teaching environmental science in the field.

Ecology and systematic biology sophomore Annie Gillespie said the symposium will be a great opportunity for students.

"It will be a place to develop contacts with professionals in various environmental careers," Gillespie said. "We thought this would be a good way to expose students to the wide range of careers that directly affect the environment."

Gillespie said she was surprised so many environmental groups were interested in speaking.

"We were just hoping to get four or five groups, but we ended up with nine," Gillespie said. "A lot of those companies are sending their top executives. The groups that were contacted really took interest in sharing their experiences with us."

Gillespie also credits wildlife club president Michaela Koenig for her effort in planning the event.

"Michaela has really put a lot of time and energy into making this happen," Gillespie said. "Her devotion to the environment really shows through this event. She has had a really big impact on the students in the biology department."

The symposium is free of charge to the public and will be followed by a reception in the Fisher Science Museum in building 33.

— written by OCOB Interim Dean Terri Swartz.

Lear also addressed the group on a plan of action.

"Baker has something to lose now," Lear said at the meeting. "It shows that something is wrong in the (Orfalea) College of Business if we get up and leave."

Swartz did not acknowledge any friction between the department and OCOB.

"IT is where it belongs," Swartz said. "There has only been discussion of the possibility (to move)."

It could not be confirmed whether IT faculty have voiced concern to the California Faculty Association (CFA), which investigates faculty rights, contract enforcement and fair treatment.

"There is definitely faculty concern," said Phil Fetzter, CFA affiliate for the Orfalea College of Business. "But it is not in the interest of faculty to be identified with comments because of the potential retaliation from the (Orfalea) College of Business."

Student committees will be formed this week to research facts and solicit help. Once completed, the groups will send a letter to the National Association of Industrial Technology, industry, alumni and parents.

"We do have a reputation to uphold," Lear said. "We want to remain the better person."

Crime Round-Up

April 9: A purple Rockhopper bicycle was stolen from building 10 (Erhart Agriculture) bike rack. Reports did not indicate whether or not the bike could actually hop rocks.

—A window to a Sequoia Hall dorm room was broken at 5 a.m.

April 10: The cuff on a 1969 Mercedes Benz parked on Mount Bishop Road was removed and the assailant(s) took off with both the vehicle and the boot. The vehicle was booted for having several unpaid parking citations. Time to start thinking about an alternate mode of transportation.

April 10 and 11: An undercover prostitution investigation from the San Luis Obispo Police Department resulted in four arrests. A 23-year-old woman from Grover Beach was arrested after offering sex for money to an undercover officer at a local motel room. Three men, 48, 54 and 58, were arrested for solicitation of prostitution after responding to an advertisement for adult entertainment in a local newspaper. Note to self: SLO is not Amsterdam; prostitution is not legal.

April 11: An unknown subject urinated on a resident adviser's door in Trinity Hall. Hey, when you gotta go, you gotta go.

—Two adult males, 19 and 21, were arrested in separate incidents for public intoxication at the Rec Center concert. Both were booked into San Luis Obispo County Jail.

April 12: Campus police responded to a report of a single shot fired in the R-2 parking lot at 3:54 a.m. The reporting party said it was not a firecracker and that the shot did not come from a rifle. No shell was found.

April 13: A 21-year-old male was arrested for public intoxication on Hathway Avenue at Kentucky Street. He was booked into County Jail.

April 14: A vehicle in the H-2 parking lot was cited for displaying a fraudulent parking permit. The permit was confiscated. Stick to counterfeiting money and then you could just buy a real permit.

California crime lab begins testing bodies of woman and infant washed ashore

RICHMOND, Calif. — A state crime lab has begun analyzing tissue and fluid samples from the bodies of a woman and baby boy that washed up at a bayside park this week to determine whether they signify a break in the search for Cal Poly alumna Laci Peterson.

Scientists are testing to see whether the woman and child are related and comparing specimens taken from the two bodies with genetic material from the missing Modesto woman, a lab spokesman said Tuesday.

Authorities said identifying the bodies could take days or even weeks. Contra Costa sheriff's spokesman Jimmy Lee said autopsies performed on the bodies Monday did not reveal the causes of death.

The Contra Costa Times reported Tuesday the mostly skeletal adult body was clad in maternity undergarments, without a head and missing parts of the limbs.

Chief Norman Lopera, of the East Bay Parks Police Department, said the case is being investigated as a homicide.

Peterson was 27 when she was last seen on Christmas Eve. Her husband, Scott, said he went fishing at Berkeley Marina after she left their home that morning to walk the dog. Peterson was due to give birth last February.

Competition heats up to get into top UC campuses

BERKELEY — The University of California admitted more freshmen this year than ever before, but bagging a spot at one of the top campuses got tougher.

UCLA and UC Berkeley turned away about three out of four applicants, while UC San Diego took just more than one-third of those who wanted to get in.

Because more people applied, the number of overall admissions was still up 4 percent, with just over 50,000 California students offered admission to one of UC's eight undergraduate campuses for fall 2003, compared to about 48,000 a year ago.

The number of underrepresented minorities — blacks, Hispanics and American Indians — was up slightly; they represented 19.1 percent of admissions last year and 19.8 percent this year.

Those numbers have been closely watched since 1998, when UC stopped considering race in admitting undergraduates. The numbers dropped sharply that year, but have slowly risen since then partly due to increased outreach, a new program guaranteeing eligibility to the top 4 percent of graduates at each high school — which is intended to benefit good students stuck in bad schools — and population changes.

Pentagon: U.S. cost of war so far is $20 billion and rising

WASHINGTON — The Iraq war has cost at least $20 billion and probably will consume that much or more in the next five months, the Pentagon's top budget officer said Wednesday.

An additional $5 billion to $7 billion will be needed to pay for getting

U.S. troops from the Persian Gulf region to their home bases, officials said. That process is just now beginning.

Those totals do not include the yet to be calculated sums for postwar reconstruction of Iraq, the Defense Department's comptroller said at a news conference. The United States is counting on contributions from other countries to pay part of the rebuilding cost.

Dov Zakheim said military operations in Iraq to date have cost about $10 billion to $12 billion. Personnel costs have been about $6 billion and the cost of munitions has been more than $3 billion. The figures include the cost to move 250,000 troops to the Persian Gulf area.

U.S., North Korea to begin nuclear talks in Beijing, South Korean minister says

SEOUL, South Korea — U.S., Chinese and North Korean officials will meet in Beijing next week to try to resolve a six-month standoff over the communist North's suspected development of nuclear weapons, U.S. and South Korean officials said Wednesday.

The talks could be a major step toward easing tension on the Korean Peninsula, which plunged into crisis in October when the United States accused North Korea of having a secret nuclear weapons program.

Secretary of State Colin Powell said the quick U.S. military success in Iraq may have influenced North Korea's thinking on opening diplomatic discussions.

After insisting on one-on-one talks with Washington for months, Pyongyang indicated Saturday it was willing to accept U.S. demands for multilateral discussions on the dispute.

"We don't anticipate an immediate breakthrough, but we're looking for progress," said Sean McCormack, a national security spokesman at the White House.

He said China will host the talks and fully participate in them.

Police killed in attacks by communist guerrillas

PATNA, India — Communist guerrillas staged two separate attacks on police in eastern India, killing eight officers, officials said Tuesday.

Three officers also were injured when rebels detonated a land mine early Tuesday as they were returning from a patrol in the densely forested Cherki Valley, Inspector-General of Police A.C. Verma told The Associated Press.

The area is about 60 miles south of Patna, the state capital. The attackers fled after taking the officers' weapons and ammunition, Verma said.

Hours earlier, rebels detonated two land mines, injuring five soldiers and their driver, police said. A rebel was killed in a gunfight following the attack in the Manatu area.

Militants of the outlawed Maoist Communist Center were suspected in both attacks, police said.

The rebels work closely with the Peoples' War Group, another guerrilla group, and are active in five states of south and eastern India. They are also suspected of having close links with Nepal's Maoist rebels.

EU signs up new members from ex-Communist east; seeks to repair divisions over Iraq

ATHENS, Greece — In heart of the city that gave birth to European democracy, leaders of 25 nations gathered Wednesday to sign treaties sweeping away the 20th century's Iron Curtain divide.

Meeting in the shadow of the ancient Acropolis, 10 nations will sign treaties joining the European Union.

"The old continent of Europe is reunified under the principles of freedom and democracy," Spanish Prime Minister Jose Maria Aznar said.

The existing 15 EU nations are also striving to repair their own unity, badly frayed by differences over Iraq.

Divided over the conflict, British Prime Minister Tony Blair, French President Jacques Chirac and the other leaders are seeking to present a united front on how to help postwar Iraq.

U.N. Secretary-general Kofi Annan joined the EU leaders, who have signaled their support for a strong U.N. role in postwar reconstruction despite doubts from the United States.

Thousands of anti-war demonstrators also crowded the streets near the signing ceremony in the ancient Athens Agora, many clashing with police who fired tear gas to keep them away from where the leaders were gathered.

Equal opportunity: Take care of the hair down there

In 2001, I studied abroad in Rome. An integrated member of Roman society, I spoke the language, joined a gym and dated a swarthy Italian named Gabri. We would ride around the Coliseum at night on his Vespa and he'd take me to his countryside villa on holiday. He was the quintessential Italian and I was the typical California girl, blonde and bunny nosed. But when we hooked up, he was horrified.

"What is a dis?" he cried, pointing south of the border, "You look lika leet girl!"

I explained our country's habit of extreme waxing.

"You should look lika wooman, e dey hava hair!"

I should look like a woman, but instead I look like an American. Our culture loathes body hair. We've accepted shaving our legs and armpits. But why all the recent pressure to go bare down below?

Well, let me refine that: Why are WOMEN expected to be hairless?

Men are required to shave their face and nothing else, and even that is optional! Yes, some guys do shave or trim their "boys," and we greatly appreciate it. Women don't like pubes any more than men do. We don't rejoice at finding dark little whiskers in our clean white sheets or wading through them when hooking up. And boys are basically covered with hair. I dated a guy who refused to even clip the hedges, arguing, "What would the guys think?"

"That you're getting a lot more oral sex!" I snapped.

In the end, he wouldn't comply, so I didn't put out.

Perhaps the problem lies in misconception about shaving or waxing. Boys, read this next section carefully, several times if need be.

WAXING IS PAINFUL. Very, very painful. Legs and underarms aren't bad at all, but around the lady bits you start to whimper and tear up.

The red bumps of trauma, the bits of left-over wax sticking to your inner thigh, the $40 price tag: It f-----g sucks. But I wouldn't complain if guys were subject to even remotely similar scrutiny. Boo hoo, boys don't want to shave, they might cut themselves. Well cowboy up and match your woman's efforts! There is a lot of flat surface on men's nether regions, but women are built like race tracks, curves and turns everywhere. Shaving the whole thing is a hazard.

And girls, we all know that once you start, you can't stop. It's like heroin or potato chips.

"It doesn't matter how closely you shaved, it grows back immediately, sometimes the very same day. And then you're stuck doing it forever!" complains Amy.

As the Vagina Monologues astutely observed, the hair is there for a reason.

You itch like crazy in underwear and feel like a cactus when you have sex. But the worst is how ridiculous you look. I felt like a little girl, Mr. Bigglesworth and a crab rolled into one unsexy package. Guys may think it's erotic, but my B-cup and I don't feel like porn stars at all.

Many girls opt for the "racing stripe" look rather than the full monty, usually a good compromise. Salons call this the "Playboy wax," and I'll get creative, shaping a lightening bolt like my idol, "Sex and the City's" Samantha.

This is also the best option for swimsuit season. But some like all or nothing: Nice womanly "V" or no hair at all, none of this "landing strip" stuff.

As for Brazilian waxes, the "front, back and in between" style is only necessary for girls cart-wheeling down the beach at Pirates Cove.

But many girls genuinely like being hairless.

"I just feel more confident and sexy that way," says my hygienic roommate, "and I think it enhances lubrication."

Many guys claim that a shaved girl makes for a better bedroom experience. Boys, please recognize all the torturous things women do to their bodies in an effort to be attractive and try a little public equality. And if good sex is really what you're after, try being European for a night: Pry the Mach3 out of her hand and tell her she's perfect just the way she is.

Students should clean up their act for more classes

From that extra $48 the undergraduates shelled out at the beginning of winter quarter to the reduction of classes and teachers on campus, most Cal Poly students are very aware of how the budget crisis is affecting their schooling.

However, there is one avenue that is greatly affected, yet most students do not even know anything about it.

The custodial services office on campus has ceased hiring new janitors to save some extra

Commentary

money in light of the new budget proposal.

Your first reaction to this might be, "Wait, who is going to clean up after me now?" The answer to this plaguing question seems simple, though.

Since January, when the budget crunches first went into effect, students and faculty alike have had to make many adjustments. Governor Gray Davis enforced $326 million in reductions for the 23-campus CSU system. This equates to a 25 percent increase in undergraduate fees, not to mention a reduction in the student-to-teacher ratio and number of classes offered per quarter. That seems great, doesn't it? Not only do students get to pay more per quarter while here, but they also get to stay longer too.

With the campus facing all these new obstacles, it seems as though this should be a time to look at our priorities and make some changes. So there is a cut in the custodial services on campus. Big deal; all this means is that students now need to take some time and actually throw away their trash after eating lunch. Is it really that hard? Which would you rather have our diminishing funds spent on, new classes or hiring someone to clean up after you?

This also includes classrooms. Although it is important to have clean and up-kept classes to learn in, it will not matter in the slightest if all the classes keep getting reduced and there are no classes being taught in these rooms.

"All I know is that right now it is so hard to get the classes I need to graduate," engineering sophomore Zack Dean said. "Anything we could do to get more classes is definitely worth it. If this only requires picking up after ourselves, why not do it?"

Realistically, we all know students are not going to donate their weekends to come in and scrub the classrooms floors, especially without being compensated. Yet it seems pretty reasonable that students could take an extra minute or two before leaving the room and pick up their trash. Honestly, we learned how to do this in elementary school, so why not do it now?

If students were responsible enough to do the basic cleaning of a classroom, then the custodial services would not have to clean them as often, which would save a lot of money for what we really need, classes.

It seems like such an easy choice: Hire more people to clean up after you or get more classes? Which would students want? Hopefully you would choose the latter.

If students could just take some more time to pick up after themselves, the custodians would have an easier time cleaning up the rooms and not need to hire new staff, then poof - more money for classes. Is that not what we are here for in the first place? To learn?

Club sports teams deserve props

Editor,

My compliments on the article on the women's water polo champions ("Crown them champions," April 15). It is my understanding we have many club sports that excel on regional and national levels. All student participants and teams deserve recognition for their efforts. They spend a great deal of time training, practicing and competing without scholarships, significant travel allowances and academic support services. I would hope the Mustang Daily would find time to highlight many of the individuals as well as the club sports teams. They truly deserve the recognition.

REMEMBERing reasons for handprints

Editor,

REMEMBER week is quickly approaching (April 28 through May 2). I look forward to promoting awareness of the sexual assault that occurs on our campus, our community and our world. However, I was taken aback last Thursday as a Poly Reps tour almost walked on top of a red handprint. I did not hear the guide explain the print. In fact, in all the tours that have passed me, I've never heard the red handprints explained. I once spoke about my frustration at the painting over of the handprints to another student. He said they were being taken away because they were everywhere and it scared away potential students and their parents visiting the campus.

Each handprint used to represent the location of a reported sexual assault. This IS scary, especially the fact that they were EVERYWHERE. To decrease "scare," handprints are being erased so one print is now supposed to represent ten assaults in the general vicinity. This changes people's perception of the statistics. It now appears that the red handprints are subdued memorials to that rare victim, not the outraged wake-up call they were created to be. Painting over a handprint is painting over the memory of a woman who was raped or sexually assaulted. It is saying she and her experience will not be remembered. When history is erased, it is doomed to be repeated. Red handprints are frightening, yes. But painting over them - erasing reality - is a stronger, more frightening statement. Please, Cal Poly, reMEMber. Put the prints back.

Jaymi Heimbuch is an English junior who fights to erase the need for handprints, not the memory of them.

Arnett wrong for actions, not necessarily views

Criticism is flying as quick and destructive as the bombs over Baghdad toward controversial war correspondent Peter Arnett.

Arnett, 68, is a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist who gave an interview on Iraqi television March 30. Shortly after, he was let go by employers NBC and National Geographic Explorer for expressing his personal views on state-controlled programming.

Arnett told Iraqi interviewers that the initial war plans made by the United States had failed and that seeing images of civilian casualties was bolstering anti-war sentiment in the United States.

Are these comments anti-American? Did Arnett compromise his objectivity or was this a case of unfair dismissal because the report wasn't favorable to the American cause?

In this case, Arnett made one of the bigger mistakes of his career. Unfortunately, this isn't the first incident in which his controversial views have gotten him fired.

In 1991, Arnett was criticized for making anti-American remarks during coverage of the Gulf War. In 1998, he was fired by CNN for falsely reporting that U.S. commandos had used Sarin nerve gas to kill American forces who had defect- ed from Vietnam into Laos in 1970. His firing was strongly influenced by the Pentagon and prominent political figures.

Arnett hasn't been a favorite of the U.S. government for a while now, and nobody is willing to take the risk of keeping him, especially with pressure like that on their backs. The irony is that Arnett is probably one of the most accomplished foreign correspondents of our time. He was the first Western journalist to do interviews with Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein, and he has covered 19 wars in his 40-year career as a journalist.

The real problem lies in this new phenomenon of journalists becoming the news instead of reporting it. What was the purpose of Arnett giving an interview to Iraqi television? Was he touched by a mild case of celebrity?

An intelligent person like Arnett would know that Iraqi TV is state-run programming. Wouldn't it follow that anything he says on such an interview would be used purely for propaganda purposes? Whether he was trying to be objective or not, he was sent over to do a job: Report the news to the American people as it happens. His job was not to serve as a propaganda tool to the Iraqi government and in the process make himself the news.

In my opinion, this is the reason he was fired, because he failed to do his job. He didn't compromise his journalistic objectivity, because in all likelihood he reported both sides of the war, but the Iraqi and American people only got to see one.

Arnett showed an extreme lack of self-awareness and an incredible arrogance by accepting this interview.

Arnett made a bad decision, there is no arguing that. However, it makes me wonder whether it would be looked at in the same way if he had been in the United States doing this interview on a respected news program. I don't think so – this is a case of situational ethics in which the circumstances surrounding the interview had more to do with the firing than the actual interview did. I have to agree with Phillip Meyer, Knight Chair of Journalism for the University of North Carolina, who said that everyone needs an editor. Sometimes it is hard to look at yourself and make an adequate decision. You need an outside figure of authority to make an objective choice, because a situation like this affects not only the person involved but also the nation as a whole.

Arnett showed an extreme lack of self-awareness and an incredible arrogance by accepting this interview. During the interview, he spoke about being treated so well as a journalist by the Iraqi people and their government. He also seems to brag about the affect his coverage is having on anti-war protests. He showed no consideration for the journalists who had been expelled or killed by the Iraqi regime for taking a more pro-Western stance.

Arnett doesn't seem to realize the reason he was being treated well because many of his remarks are favorable to the regime: This was his biggest downfall, because it just adds to the negative outlook the U.S. population already has toward journalists. The insensitivity he showed, along with the awesome drive to get the biggest story, contribute to the distrust of journalists by the American people.

Mistakes or no mistake, Arnett has been rehired yet again. This time the United Kingdom's Daily Mirror, an anti-war newspaper based in London that seems to share Arnett's wariness of the American government, hired him. At least now he won't have to argue with his employer about differing views.

Let's all hope that the celebrity bug doesn't bite any other prominent journalists in the near future, because there are more important issues at hand like supporting the coalition forces and bringing unbiased coverage back home.

Put me down for $100 on Eminem overdosing

I remember filling out my NCAA Tournament bracket, full of anticipation. Even though I lost dismally (35th place), watching all those close games had me on the edge of my seat. Not because I cared about the teams, but because I bet money on them!

Some of you may gamble to make money ... not me. I gamble for the sheer rush of it. Gambling keeps my interests high and gives me that special kind of rush that only comes out when there's money on the table. I don't even care if I win or lose; the rush itself is what's worth it. There's no more intense feeling than throwing $100 down on a hand of blackjack (besides throwing $200 down). But is it possible to get that same kind of rush by betting on people's lives?

That's what BETonSPORTS.com is betting on.

The Web site, based in Costa Rica (they're illegal here), takes bets on what are called "proposition." That is, bets on things outside the sporting world and nowhere near any green felt tables. Past betting opportunities included a 5-to-1 chance that the United States will launch a military strike against North Korea by 2004, and a 3-to-1 chance that North Korea will launch a nuclear weapon at a neighboring nation by 2004.

There are long shots, too:

A 150-to-1 chance that Saddam Hussein will tour with Elton John or that he'll take over for Mother Theresa.

Tradesports.com doesn't set odds. Bets are set up like futures. For example, one "Saddam security" paid $100 if Hussein was ousted by March 30. So all those people lost.

These types of bets are not obscure, either. As of March 22, gamblers on Tradesports.com traded more than $1 million in Saddam Hussein contracts, making him the second-most traded item, next to the NCAA Tournament.

Talk about March Madness.

These types of bets seem overly morbid. They give gamblers a bad name. Most of us are content to bet on cards, horses or basketball games. Should we be betting on which hemisphere will suffer the next catastrophic earthquake? (Yes, as of my writing this, clever geologists might want to check out BETonSPORTS.com).

Last time I checked BETonSPORTS.com was April 12. The "World Events" betting section is closed to nonmembers, at least for now. However, you can still bet on the next star to overdose (Eminem is 3-to-1), or that tennis sensations Venus and Serena Williams will do porn together (10-to-1). Others include that Mike Piazza will come out of the closet (it's 10-to-1, Jerry Rice is 20-to-1), and when marijuana will become legal (50-to-1 for 2003, so don't hold your breath).

A BETonSPORTS.com representative informed me that they were no longer taking bets on the war in Iraq. He said they think the war is "pretty much over" and that "It's kind of iffy right now on whether they got him (Hussein) or didn't get him."

I hope the next time I go to a casino, I don't see people betting on body counts or where the next terrorist attack will be. I've got no problem with other people betting on death and destruction, but I would never do it. It wouldn't give me a rush.

It would be kind of a downer – but put me down for $20 on Piazza.

More letters to the editor

More in the great Giants vs. Dodgers debate – Go Giants!

Editor,

I am writing in response to both pro-Dodger letters in the Mustang Daily. More specifically, I want to address a few issues that were put forth out of arrogance. First, in regard to Mr. Matherly's claim that the Giants "rely solely on one individual to get home runs," if you were familiar with the Giants' current stats you would find a name other than Barry at the top of their home run list. Furthermore, I question your emphasis on home run hitters. However, while we're on this subject, be sure to thank your old center fielder for his blast on Thursday.

Finally, Mr. Matherly, I congratulate you on your Hall of Fame broadcaster. While the Giants don't have Vin Scully, I have the privilege of hearing John Miller as well as Poly graduate Mike Krukow. While I respect your opinion, I can't say the same to Mr. Steingrube. I don't know where to begin with you. Do you think that Pac Bell in its first few years could carry the "legend or lore that Dodger stadium possesses"? Use common sense. However, with the home run king and a World Series under its belt, Pac Bell is well on its way. As for the San Francisco fans, dedication through the hard times is what really counts. I respect Red Sox and Cubs fans much more than all those former Dodger fans who have found their way down to Anaheim. I love baseball and its rivalries, but please think before speaking.

Scott Nystrom is a business senior.

Editor,

This is in response to the letters by Cori Matherly and Andrew Steingrube, who attempted to refute my Giants vs. Dodgers article. After reading their misguiding responses, I was convicted to point these two confused souls toward the light.

Here is a simple comparison of the Giants and Dodgers. Last team who used corked bats: Dodgers (Wilton Guerrero). Last team to win a Gold Glove: Giants. Last team to go winless in the postseason for almost 15 years: Dodgers. Last team to win Manager of the Year: Giants. Last team whose GM fought with a fan and was soon fired: Dodgers. Last team to win the NL West: Giants. Team whose home city is known even more for its disgusting smog than its disgusting baseball team: Dodgers. Last team to win the pennant: Giants. Last team who fell for the hidden ball trick (a trick that only works on sleeping Little Leaguers): Dodgers (J.T. Snow on Raul Mondesi). Team with more players in the Hall of Fame: Giants. Team whose "fans" notoriously stroll into the park in the 3rd inning, watch their team choke for about four innings and leave in the 7th: Dodgers. Team whose loyal fans sell out every game: Giants. Last team who spent almost $100 million to finish in third place: Dodgers. Team whose boring, irritating idiot of a broadcaster is only alive due to the technology of cryogenics: Dodgers.

Enough said. I forgive you, lowly Dodger fans. GO GIANTS!

Josh Reynolds is an architectural engineering sophomore.

Editor,

This is in response to all the Giant bashing/Dodger loving letters to the editor that have recently been displayed in the Mustang Daily. All I can do is laugh. Not only did the Giants go to the World Series last year, but they started this season freakishly well. I agree with Justin Robinson's letter when he says the Giants have been playing easy teams, but we just swept your precious Dodgers, what does that say about your team? To all you 5-9 (through Tuesday) Dodger fans out there, get ready for a 13-1 Giants ass rocking because my boys aren't about to start slacking once they start playing real teams. Teams like the Dodgers are just warming us up. To all the Giants fans out there: Don't let these Dodger fans dominate the paper, these are happy Giants days. In fact, the only thing that would make me happier as a Giants fan would be if they would start showing more Giants games on TV, instead of the Angels and Dodgers. And to end with no originality, but sticking with tradition: GO GIANTS!

Dry campus hypocritical, disappointing

Editor,

I was disappointed to see that Cal Poly's administration upheld the dry campus policy ("Alcohol policy upheld in new housing," April 15). I think it is an illogical and extreme stance on the issue of alcohol on campus. I can understand the problems of alcohol in on-campus housing, and I understand that the administration is trying to promote alcohol moderation, but it is no reason to disallow the entire campus from alcohol. Wine is an essential part of culture here on the Central Coast. Look around, we live in wine country!

Especially with the advent of the new viticulture major, it seems a little silly to let students make the stuff but not drink it (only if they are of legal age, of course).

The part that makes me angry is that only Warren Baker is allowed to authorize alcohol consumption. Of course: The guy who makes the rules is the only one who doesn't have to abide by them. It is unfair and hypocritical to allow alumni (just because they have money) to drink on campus. If Cal Poly wants a dry campus, then make it dry for everyone!

I urge the new viticulture department to fight for their right to drink alcohol on campus, and I also hope the administration realizes that such a staunch position on alcohol is ridiculous.

Christopher W. Martin is an aeronautical engineering senior.

For college students, there's nothing quite like the smell of a good bargain, but in the shopping world of San Luis Obispo that scent can be hard to find.

However, for those willing to settle for a find boasting an aroma a little more moth ball than modern, it might be worth the time to explore the under-tapped vintage and thrift store resources the town offers.

Before getting started, it's good to know that there is a difference between vintage stores and thrift stores — beyond price, that is. According to shopkeeper Ada Cole of Second Time Around and The Pink Flamingo owner Anthony Nelson, the distinction between the two types of second-hand stores lies in the level of selectivity.

"Vintage offers people something more authentic than what you find in a thrift store," Cole said.

Much of the authentic clothing available in vintage stores is also well preserved and one-of-a-kind when compared to many thrift store items.

"Vintage includes all originals and few-and-far-between items," Nelson said. "We only buy 20th-century originals. We don't sell any retro reproductions."

Thus, vintage stores have plenty of unique garments that come in handy for themed events such as disco parties, Halloween and Mardi Gras, as well as high-quality pieces that cater to today's recycled trends.

Thrift stores, on the other hand, are less choosy about the clothing and accessories they offer, but the wide selection they provide caters to almost any occasion.

Since these stores get their merchandise as donations from local sources such as students, finding pieces that complement a college lifestyle is easy.

Erica Edgerly, the manager at Goodwill, explained the clothes they see largely reflect that the store is located in a college town.

"We get most of our donations when school lets out in the summer," she said, "and college students also buy from us. It's a nice exchange."

Edgerly said Goodwill tries to keep all needs in mind, so they aren't as selective or fashion-conscious as some vintage specialists. But because a lot of the clothing is from college students, it caters to those same students as well. Comfortable T-shirts, see THRIFT, page 9

Orange County rock band comes full circle

► Tactic blends crunching guitars, Christian-inspired lyrics and Linkin Park-esque sound for return to San Luis Obispo County roots

By Samantha Yale
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Orange County-based rock band Tactic will return to familiar territory when it plays at University Union Hour Thursday at 11 a.m.

Three of the four band members are originally from the Central Coast. Brandon Gardner (vocals/guitar), Josh Jordan (bass) and Doug McLaughlin (guitar) met while attending high school in Paso Robles. They later moved to Orange County as part of a cultural exchange program where young people can experience a high-paced life and retirees can move to the quieter Central Coast.

Orange County native Jud White joined the band on drums in the middle of 2002, completing Tactic's lineup.

"We're just a rock band ... rock-driven stuff," said Jordan, a 2002 Cal Poly graduate. Jordan also said he credits Tactic's sound to alternative and hip-hop influences.

In addition to playing bass,

Jordan said the band puts his business degree to good use, as he does Tactic's bookkeeping.

With three of the band members holding college degrees and Jud attending California State University, Long Beach, the guys keep busy with work and school, in addition to the band.

"A lot of us work with kids," said Jordan, who coaches girl's soccer.

Producer/engineer Dusk Bennett, who has worked with big names like Incubus and Fiona Apple, heard Tactic's rough demo and liked what he heard. While Tactic does not currently have a recording contract, Bennett has signed on to work with them on the band's debut album.

The guys are currently recording at Stigmata Recorders in Los Angeles. The band also plans to shoot a video soon.

"We're not going to wait around for a record label (to complete the album)," Jordan said. "We're almost done with (recording) the guitar."

The band, which sounds something like a harder-rocking Linkin

Park with the Christian-themed lyrics typical of Jars Of Clay, counts No Doubt, Goldfinger and, not surprisingly, Linkin Park among their influences.

"We're still a pretty new band," Jordan said, explaining why touring is usually limited to California venues, including college campuses and churches.

The band's fan base is mostly in Orange County, but it's quickly expanding; the band just played two shows in Reno.

"In Reno, the kids were just jumping everywhere," Jordan said.

Jordan said he wants Cal Poly to exhibit the same enthusiasm.

"Hopefully, everybody will enjoy it and have a good time and not worry what people think," he said.

McLaughlin agrees.

"We just hope it turns out to be a lot of fun," he said. "We want to meet a lot of people."

McLaughlin said he prefers playing for college students "as opposed to junior highs, who aren't old enough to appreciate good music."

"We just try to get more people familiar with us," he said. "We are laying down the ground work for more future tours."

"Hopefully, everybody will enjoy (the show) and have a good time and not worry about what people think."

perfectly worn jeans, 1980s-style running shorts and the occasional velour jumpsuit are stand-out pieces that make frequent thrift store appearances.

Whether vintage or thrift, second-hand stores offer an alternative that is generally more affordable than a traditional San Luis Obispo shopping spree, which makes updating a wardrobe more fun than frustrating. To prevent further frustration, below is a guide to some of the best-smelling bargains in San Luis Obispo, one or more of which will satisfy the nostrils of even the most frugal spring shopper.

Decades

Location: 785 Higuera St.

EMILY LAUBACHER/MUSTANG DAILY

Art and design junior Jillian Kliever struts her stuff in a vintage cotton embroidered shirt and Britain vintage patchwork jeans.

Selection: Catering to a customer base described by employee Eliese Scott as "college students, people in their 30s and 40s and seasonal customers like all the spring breakers," Decades specializes in men's and women's vintage clothing and new and used shoes (including Dr. Martins and Chuck Taylor Converse shoes). They also have Dickies and a

Prices: Although most of the clothing at The Pink Flamingo is steeply priced, items like bathing suits are still cheaper than new ones at many boutiques. Dresses run in the range of $30 and up and men's Hawaiian shirts are worth the higher price if they're intended for more than one event.

Second Time Around

Location: 577 Marsh St.

full wall stocked with gently used Levi's 501 jeans. Racks of mainly 1950s through 1970s items like slouchy vintage sweaters, funky T-shirts, retro warm-ups, eccentric leather items and denim jackets make up the rest of the Decades second-hand clothing collection.

Prices: The used items at Decades are priced based on quality, age and uniqueness, Scott said, but they are significantly steeper than those at thrift stores. Warm-ups cost about $20 a piece and 501s are almost priced like new — $25 to $30. But they might be worth it, since they're already broken-in.

The Pink Flamingo

Location: 251 Higuera St.

Selection: As the newest addition to San Luis Obispo's vintage fashion scene, The Pink Flamingo carries original, vintage furniture, pottery and clothing.

"We cater mainly to baby boomers, because our things remind them of their childhoods," Nelson said. "But students actually make up a lot of customers."

Maybe this is because they also boast seasonal clothing like their current collection of Hawaiian shirts and vintage bathing suits (think tan-flattering pastel prints) and fun accessories like large Audrey Hepburn sunglasses, Ray Bans and rings.

wear, evening gowns, biker leather, military jackets, denim, a wide selection of hats and costume jewelry and a back room full of bold clothing that was intended for costume rental but is now available for sale. Much of what Second Time Around offers is "from the '50s or before," said Cole. And while the shop doesn't necessarily cater to the seasons, much of what Second Time Around sells is what is most popular at the moment.

"If (owner) Bernice sees something that's selling well, she'll look for more of it," Cole said. "Or if someone mentions something they're looking for, she'll keep an eye out."

Prices: Since Second Time Around targets students mainly through rentals, the items for purchase don't readily fit a student budget. Dresses here are also $30 and up, and men's military wear is about the same. However, because the clothing is now for purchase, it's more of an investment.

"I'd pay $40 for a costume here, so $20 for a skirt that I don't have to return isn't so bad," said customer and landscape architecture sophomore Melissa Lee. "I've already bought more expensive things for school today, so I've earned it."

shirts, denim, khaki and children's clothes, the Goodwill store is the place to realistically refresh a wardrobe for spring. Favorites include holey-crotched men's jeans (that girls can wear low-slung for a sassy Janet Jackson style), little boys' shirts, super-soft polo shirts for guys and classic Dockers. Goodwill is also a good place to go to get creative said Miriam Gee, an architecture junior and an avid thrift store shopper. She said she turns to Goodwill for clothes that she can personalize.

"I buy fun things here — T-shirts, jeans — and cut them up to make them more like what's trendy, but for like, $2," she said.

Prices: The price is right for a student budget. With men's pants priced at $4.99 and ladies' blouses priced at $2.99, it's feasible to get an outfit or two and a nice Sunday lunch downtown on the same $20 bill.

program participants will be able to remain employed full time while still being enrolled. Specific to the Central Coast, the program trains teaching professionals to become leaders in mid-sized to rural school districts.

The plans have been in the making for the last 15 years, Gentilucci said. Ideas began to become a reality in 2001, when the Chancellor of the Cal State System and the President of the UC System reached an agreement to initiate joint programs between the two university systems.

"The program will take the best of both institutions and synthesize them together," Gentilucci said.

The program takes the UC's focus on theory research and combines it with the CSU applied practice methods, Gentilucci said.

The doctorate program is being funded by a $342,000 state start-up grant to be spread out over a two-year period. After the two-year grant stops, the UC system is committed to fund the program.

This is the first partnership between Cal Poly and UCSB, with other joint CSU and UC programs to follow.

With course work beginning in fall, the program is currently accepting applications. Gentilucci said they will only be accepting 15 students for the first year and 12 students for every year thereafter.

Some say the program was much needed on the Central Coast.

"Educational leaders are needed to meet the changing demands of California's school districts," Gentilucci said.

Program faculty Kenneth Palmer agreed.

"Before this program, education professionals only source of administration training was at UCLA and UC Berkeley, and now that's no longer the case," Palmer said.

The students admitted the program will create cohorts or groups with which they'll work side by side through the entire process.

The cohort teams will work with actual San Luis Obispo County school districts experience. Palmer said the program's individuality lies in the participants involvement with professional developmental districts.

"The student's will be able to create their dissertations from their cohort team's work," Palmer said. "They'll be working in real school districts with real children on real problems."

The program is arranged so its graduates will become scholar practitioners, bringing theory research and first hand experience to K-12 schools, community colleges, universities, government agencies, and other allied organizations.

PHILOSOPHY

Dickinson, philosophy sophomore Daniel Fogal will also address the topic of relativism.

After the student panel speeches, there will be a lunch break from noon to 1:10 p.m. After the break, three notable professors will speak on a variety of topics.

Philosophy professor Keith Abney will lead the first discussion after the break from 1:10 to 2:30 p.m. on "Human Cloning and the Ethics of Scientific Research." His speech consists of ethical scientific research on humans, informing the public on cloning, research on cloning, exploring the ethics of cloning and weighing the pros and cons.

"Some crazy movies such as 'Multiplicity' give many misconceptions on cloning to the general public," Abney said. "I want to clear up all misconceptions and inform the public of what cloning entails and the process behind it."

Cloning is basically producing a delayed human being that is not a duplicate, but share the same genes with another person.

"I'm completely in favor of cloning under certain circumstances," Abney said.

The following two speakers will be philosophy professors Judy Saltzman and Fabienne Chauderlot. Saltzman will present "Islam, Religion, and Ideology" from 2:40 to 4 p.m., followed by Chauderlot's speech on "Facets of French Feminism: Back to the Future" from 4:10 to 6 p.m.

The colloquium is free to the public.

Campbell to her rank as lieutenant colonel and battalion commander.

Campbell spent six years at the New Mexico Military Institute. She moved to San Luis Obispo in 2000 and continued her ROTC training.

"I really enjoy the lifestyle, the challenges and the experiences," Campbell said. "A lot of people don't have to organize and evaluate 50 people. They don't get the opportunity to push themselves to do things that are that difficult."

Campbell will continue pushing herself to succeed in future endeavors.

"I'm being branched aviation, so I'm going to fly helicopters," Campbell said. "I'm extremely excited. I'm going to flight school tentatively in August and I'm on cloud nine because that is exactly what I want to do."

Architectural engineering sophomore Ryan Adams, ROTC team leader for the first squad, said being in ROTC helps him alleviate school-related stress.

"Through ROTC, I've gained a better understanding of myself and my abilities as a person, as well as about friendship," Adams said. "I can honestly say some of the people involved with ROTC I can see myself being friends with my entire life."

Although the ROTC cadets train for war, they are not on active duty, and hence were not in danger of being called to war against Iraq. However, Key said that he is confident that once trained, war would not seem so ominous.

"Fighting in war really isn't as scary as people think," Key said. "You have a lot of support from your brothers and sisters supporting you. We're like a big family out there."

Key said the war has been successful. To those against the war, Key said it is their constitutional right to have an opinion.

"Through ROTC, I've gained a better understanding of myself and my abilities as a person, as well as about friendship."

As for these cadets, they tend to disagree.

"I would follow my commander-in-chief anywhere," Campbell said.

the day Tuesday with a 76.

All competitors seemed to have trouble with a hole at the end of the first nine. The 184-yard, par-three 17th posed problems for competitors all day long and continually kept players scrambling for pars and bogeys. Poly's second lead player, Holly Lampert, found the close pine trees on the right and would be forced to bogey the hole. A few minutes later, Drago would miss a chance to capitalize on a par opportunity on the same hole. The Eastern Washington coach felt the 17th was more of a mind game than of physical talent.

"It's more visually intimidating than physically challenging because of the strong cross wind and overhanging branches," coach Marc Hughes said. "The ladies tend to have lower trajectory shots than men and the lowered branches on the right side play a big part in that hole."

At the end of the front nine, Cal Poly looked to be gaining ground on EWU, but as Moos said, it's always hard to tell how his players are feeling and reacting to their play. He wants to get some insight, but at the same time give them some room to themselves.

"After the first nine, we seemed to be moving in on Washington and we looked in good shape," Moos said. "But the middle of the round is very hard to tell how you're doing and what you can expect."

Cal Poly could not make up the gap at the end of the day, however, and Eastern Washington University was able to keep their seven-stroke lead through both days. University of Riverside followed closely behind in third and was unable to close their 10-stroke deficit. EWU finished with a final score of 958 for both days while Cal Poly ended with 965.

Hughes said he was pleased with his team's performance and excited by Andrea Folk's day. Folk had the second lowest score Tuesday with a round of five-over-par 77.

"We wanted to use this tournament as a practice setup for next week," Hughes said. "We all wanted to make sure that they would be mentally prepared for next week and the additional pressure."

Also finishing in the top-twenty were junior Ryan Dwight and junior Zach King. Dwight finished tied for 10th with a total score of 217. King finished tied for 13th with a total score of 220.

After the first day of competition, Bertoni led the tournament by eight strokes. Dexheimer finished the first day tied for second place. He shot a first round of 73 and a second round of 67 for a combined score of 140.

Women's Lacrosse Poly to host UC Santa Barbara

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF REPORT

The Cal Poly women's lacrosse team hosts UC Santa Barbara tonight in the team's final home match of the season. The action starts at 6 p.m. at the Sports Complex.

Wrestling Halsey earns spot on world team

CAL POLY SPORTS INFORMATION REPORT

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — Members of the Cal Poly wrestling team competed in the National Junior Championships in Chattanooga, Tenn., with eight finishes in the top eight.

In the Greco-Roman competition, Pac-10 Champion Ryan Halsey won the 84kg division with a 4-0 record including two pins and a technical fall. Halsey was also awarded the Gorrarian Award for most falls in the least time. He also finished seventh in the freestyle competition with a 5-2 mark. His performance earned him a spot on the Greco-Roman Junior World Team that will compete this summer.

Also in the Greco-Roman competition, Juan Ramirez took fifth in the 55kg division, while Steve Gee took third in the 74kg division, joining Keith Kroeger, who took fifth in the division.

In Saturday's freestyle competition, Logan Ingram took seventh in the 55kg division with a 3-2 record, while Darrell Vasquez took sixth in the 60kg division after suffering an injury in a semifinal loss. Also, David Roberts took seventh in the 66kg division with a 4-3 record.

Freshman Tony Franco also participated in the competition, as all Cal Poly wrestlers competed for the David Schultz Wrestling Club in the tournament.

Men's Golf Bertoni named BW Golfer of the Week

CAL POLY SPORTS INFORMATION REPORT

Freshman Travis Bertoni earned Big West Golf Athlete of the Week honors for his performance this past weekend at the Fidelity National Title Intercollegiate held at the Cypress Ridge Golf Course in Arroyo Grande. Bertoni shot rounds of 66, 66 and 72 to win the tournament with a combined score of 204. He shot 12 under par.

Bertoni led the team to a first-place finish in the tournament, which was the first tournament win for the Mustang men's golf program since being re-established in 2001 as a NCAA Division I program.

► Mustangs settle for second after failing to gain ground in tourney

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

Clear skies and soft greens opened the final round of the 2003 National Fidelity Title tournament, as the Cal Poly's women's golf team couldn't fight back from a seven-stroke deficit, finishing in second place.

Trailing visiting Eastern Washington University by seven strokes entering the final day of play, lead players Gina Drago and Holly Lampert needed to open up on Tuesday morning with some solid play in order to catch EWU.

However, as Cal Poly head coach Tom Moos said, any one of the players on the team could post a good low score for the team.

"We played well on the front nine, and we could've made a run," Moos said. "Any one of them can have a good day and it seems different girls can help us out at separate times," Moos said.

The University of Riverside team was only three shots back from Poly at the start of the round on Tuesday, thanks to the help of Riverside golfer Kimberly Feliciano. Feliciano posted the lowest score of the opening rounds on Monday, scoring a 76 on the first 18 holes and an 80 after the second.

With wet weather during the weekend and the early start of the week, the players and coaches were very happy with how the course at Cypress Ridge in Arroyo Grande was playing.

"It's been pretty wet the past couple of days so the greens are slow and soft," freshman Heather McGinnis said.

With the women teeing off on the 10th hole as the men were starting on hole one, Staci Davison looked to gain strokes early in the day on the par-five 13th. Davison blasted her drive down the middle of the fairway and left herself with a close second approach shot.
