Ag dean resigns to follow other interests

By Meredith Rehman
Staff Writer

After 10 years as the dean of the School of Agriculture, Lark Carter has decided to step down from the position to pursue other professional interests.

Respected by colleagues, teachers and students, Carter will leave a mark on the School of Agriculture for many years to come.

"Lark always wanted to make sure that he was doing what was best and in the best interest of all the people who would be affected by it," said Vice President for Academic Affairs Robert Koob. "He is a very positive and extraordinarily caring man. With all of the budget cuts occurring, I think it made him feel uncomfortable because he cared so much about the feelings of all the people that he worked with."

Koob said he accepted Carter's resignation with regret, but added that Carter has done what deans are asked to do.

"Deans are responsible for the broad progress of their school, and he's done things on all kinds of fronts," he said. "He tried to shepherd the evolution of the program of teaching, worked with national committees to make sure that he was fully aware of what was going on in the nation. He also worked with the agribusiness community to understand their

P.E. department wrestles with loss of 73 sections

CSU budget ax hacks 155 Professional Studies classes from Poly's fall schedule

By Barbara Barcellona
Staff Writer

The fact that many students were unable to enroll in overloaded physical education classes this quarter could leave Cal Poly students under the impression that this year will be all work and no play.

Since last May, 155 classes have been cut from the School of Professional Studies, under which P.E. falls, said Dean Harry J. Busselen. Elective classes were the first to be cut in all departments, including 73 from P.E.

Although all departments suffered course cuts this year, P.E. is an example of one of the hardest hit.

"P.E. just had more to cut," Busselen said.

All part-time staff members in the School of Professional Studies were laid off, including those from P.E., said Busselen. The full-time staff had the choice to take more students or not, he said.

Some instructors, like Deanne (Johnson) Vochatzer, think this option caused more stress. "To me that was a cop-out. It just put the burden on the teachers. We are not happy on this side of campus," said Vochatzer, Cal Poly women's track and cross country coach.

Classes are overloaded already and students lucky to get in are feeling cheated, Vochatzer said. Students understand the situation, she said, but they're angry to be paying top dollar for crowded conditions.

The focus in deciding what to cut was on minimizing the impact on students so they could graduate on time, Busselen said. In light of the department's $1.3 million reduction, Busselen said he thinks the school generally did a good job.

"I would have chosen other areas to reduce, but it was a good effort," he said.

Vochatzer, however, does not see it as a good effort.

"I'm sorry the university does not think the students' well-being is important, and it's obvious they don't," she said. "There is nothing better than seeing a healthy, active campus where students are letting off steam and pressure through sports."

Although the quantity of services at Cal Poly has diminished, the quality has not, said Robert

Peace Corps visits Poly to share information, attract applicants

Volunteer positions available in 80 overseas countries

By Holly Vanderlaan
Staff Writer

Representatives and returned Peace Corps volunteers will be on campus today through Thursday to explain the opportunities available in more than 80 different countries.

The Peace Corps is seeking applicants with agriculture, business, math, science and/or education backgrounds. Volunteers selected to teach overseas must have a bachelor's degree, but a teaching certificate is not necessary. Completion of 10 to 15 semester units in math or science can enable an applicant to qualify.

"The Peace Corps is looking for qualified and motivated individuals in a variety of fields to provide technical assistance to developing countries," said Troy Flanagan, Peace Corps graduate coordinator.

Recruiting activities include an information booth in the University Union Plaza from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. each day. Special seminars will also be held discussing assignments in the fields of math and science, as well as agriculture and forestry. Returned volunteers will talk about international issues on the final day.

Interviews will be held Oct. 28, but applications must be completed prior to interview (see chart).

A Peace Corps assignment is a two-year, voluntary commitment with all expenses paid and language and cross-cultural training provided. A $5,400 cash "readjustment" allowance is also paid at the completion of service. To qualify, a volunteer must be a

High pollutant levels in Greece pose danger

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Air pollution surpassed danger levels in the capital Monday, and the government planned to consider temporarily banning cars from the city center.

A brown cloud, known by Athenians as "the Nefos," often forms over this capital of about four million people on warm, still days.

On Monday, temperatures were in the 90s. The Environment Ministry said nitrogen dioxide levels were at 561 milligrams per cubic meter of air near the business district, while carbon monoxide hit 15.6. The danger levels for the two pollutants are 500 and 15 milligrams respectively.

Salvadoran colonel convicted of murder

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The conviction of a Salvadoran colonel for ordering a massacre of Jesuit priests strikes a first blow at the veritable wall of impunity long enjoyed by the military across most of Central America.

Yet the trial may not have been held if not for international pressure.

The U.S. Congress had made successful prosecution of the Jesuits' killers a condition for continued aid to El Salvador's rightist government.

Sen. Bob Kerrey joins 1992 presidential race

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Nebraska Sen. Bob Kerrey entered the 1992 presidential race today, offering himself as a bold new leader eager to reverse a decade of economic decline and "to lead America's fearless, restless voyage of generational progress."

The 48-year-old Vietnam war hero turned protester said the hope his generation inherited from its parents had been dashed in the 1980s by shortsighted leaders worried more about re-election than chronic problems he said gave today's children good reason to be pessimistic about their future.

Government settles in Exxon Valdez litigation

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Exxon Corp. and the state and federal governments have agreed to a $1.025 billion settlement of government litigation over the nation's biggest oil spill, Gov. Walter J. Hickel said today.

The new settlement slightly revises a $1 billion agreement that was rejected by a federal judge and Alaska legislators earlier this year.

The major change is a $150 million criminal fine, of which $25 million is suspended — that is $25 million more than in an earlier settlement.

Gov. Wilson vetoes job discrimination bill

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Gov. Pete Wilson vetoed a bill outlawing job discrimination against homosexuals, declaring the measure would unduly burden employers.

Gay rights activists and others accused Wilson of betraying the homosexual community with his veto Sunday. About 350 people protested with a march through West Hollywood.

The bill, in most instances, would have banned employment discrimination based on sexual orientation.

State report reveals declining dropout rate

SACRAMENTO (AP) — The California school dropout rate fell from 25 percent in 1986 to 20.1 percent to 1990, a state education report said Monday.

State school chief Bill Honig and education secretary Maureen DiMarco released California's National Education Goals Report to coincide with the first report of the National Education Goals Panel.

"California's educational community has made significant strides during the last decade, in spite of enormous challenges," said DiMarco, who heads Wilson's Child Development and Education Department.

SLO City Council meets tonight, public welcome

The San Luis Obispo City Council will hold its regular public meeting today at 7 p.m. in the Council Chambers at City Hall (990 Palm Street).

A copy of the agenda is available at the San Luis Obispo County Library. Staff reports and other information on agenda items are available through the City Clerk. The meeting will be broadcast on radio by KCPR FM 91.3.

Immediately following roll call, members of the public may address the City Council on items that do not appear on the printed agenda. Public hearing items will be heard as they appear on the agenda.

The Council welcomes comment from the public regarding issues or concerns of the community.

For better or worse, faculty given new office building

Professors worried about location of new facility

By Brian Volk
Staff Writer

In the wake of a new year at Cal Poly, many students will notice they have a new place to meet with faculty advisers — the Faculty Offices East building.

The crescent-shaped, three-story addition to the campus opened its doors the first day of fall quarter. The building houses the School of Science and Mathematics faculty, an advising center and a health professions office.

The building, located off Poly View Drive between the Administration and Science buildings, took more than 6 1/2 years to complete from conception to completion, including 16 months of construction.

It contains more than 94 individual faculty offices and three department complexes, of which one houses the school's dean, Philip Bailey.

Close to 120 faculty and staff members began moving into the new building on Sept. 12, and many are still unpacking.

Peter Phillips, Poly's architectural coordinator, said most of the faculty are moving from the adjacent Science building and the rest from the Math and Home Economics, Fisher Science and Science North buildings.

Phillips said that the purpose of the building was to "embrace" the California State University concept of providing faculty with their own individual offices. Phillips said providing a larger supply of new office space will help relieve the crowded offices of the older buildings, some of which were three times over capacity.

Another reason for constructing the new office space was to move faculty out of the nearby trailers into individual offices in the older buildings, Phillips said.

He also said the need for four to six trailers should be eliminated when construction on the Engineering East building is completed. Phillips said getting rid of the inefficient temporary offices was one of main reasons for the construction.

Chemistry professor David Keeling said he likes the newness of the place and the idea of having his own office, but said he is concerned that the location will not encourage enough student traffic. Unlike a lot of the older offices which were in the same building and in the direct path of many of the classes, the new office building might keep a significant number of students from visiting their advisers, he said.

Chemistry professor Jerry Houliis shares Keeling's concern that the building may isolate the student body. He recalled a time when Tenaya Hall was used as faculty office space for the

COMMENTARY

Pete Wilson is assaulting Californians with budget cuts

By Peter Hartlaub

"...Baby I got my facts learned real good right now poor man wanna be rich rich man wanna be king and a king ain't satisfied 'till he rules everything..."
—Bruce Springsteen

I've been having this reoccurring dream where I strip Pete Wilson naked and throw him into a dumpster full of broken glass.

This is not an act I am likely to commit, as I neither own a dumpster nor have the desire to strip any man naked. If it did happen, however, I wouldn't call it assault. I'd be acting by a different motive.

Self-defense.

Eliminating the state deficit through massive cuts to education is assaulting thousands of Californians. It is also lowering the quality of our society as a whole by cutting off opportunities for upward mobility to the lower-income residents of the state.

Another former California governor who frequents my REM sleep is Ronald Reagan. With his "trickle-down" theory of economics, President Reagan became the first president since the early 19th century to justify class hatred with a national policy.

Reagan's trickle-down theory involved giving tax breaks to the wealthy with the assumption that they would spend more money to support the poor. This has all the logic of giving all the food in the nation to the rich with the assumption that they will invite all the poor over for dinner.

For this, I think Reagan should be required to spend at least a year as a crowd-controlling roadie on the Public Enemy/Anthrax world tour. Either that or be forced to sit through an hour of open-mike poetry at Linnaea's Cafe.

A more feasible trickle-down theory could involve education.

Spending money on education would give many youngsters a chance to contribute to society, instead of turning to a life of crime and drugs.

Spending money on education would lower the expense of keeping many of our uneducated public in prisons and jails.

Spending money on education would give productive jobs to our most knowledgeable faculty and staff and let them hand down that knowledge to others.

Spending money on education would solve many other expensive problems and raise the level of society as a whole.

Unfortunately, in the last few years, the state spending decisions towards education have been nothing but a nightmare.

There is a very sad form of academic justice going on in this state. Only the rich can afford expensive private colleges, and as funding declines for public education, unfair advantages are developing for the wealthy.

Thankfully, the unfair advantages for the rich brought on by tax breaks in Reaganomics have not been mirrored in the most recent state tax distribution decisions. Recent tax breaks have been beneficial to the poor. Still, with heavy cuts to public education, the wealthy have an enormous advantage to getting a good education in California.

Bachelor degrees are a dime a dozen these days and it is extremely difficult to get accepted into public graduate schools. Large amounts of money are needed to make something of yourself through education in California.

I can't believe that I am the only dreamer at Cal Poly. There is a good chance that as a Cal Poly student or faculty member, you are having dreams of your own. Maybe you dream of putting Pete Wilson in a suit of armor and throwing him in a pool of Liquid Drano. Maybe you dream of strapping a chain saw in his hand, a mink coat to his back and throwing him in the middle of an Earth First! convention.

Either way, it's time he knows about it. As a community hit hard by the effects of cuts to education, it is time we execute some self-defense.

Below is Pete's address in Sacramento.

His letter readers tend to pay a little more attention if you keep it short, to the point, and mention visions of gore and violence.

Let's tell Pete our dreams.

HART ATTACKS AND STROKES

Mustang Daily criticized Public Safety in a recent editorial for ticketing cars of parents attending a speech by Warren Baker in Mott Gym.

While this may have been the worst public relations move since Roseanne Barr sang the national anthem, Public Safety does deserve some praise for their actions last spring.

When Sociology Professor Leo Pinard called Public Safety to remove a pair of tardy students from his class, Public Safety officers quickly responded and told him to stop wasting their time.

Kudos to Public Safety for keeping their priorities straight and let this be a lesson. Don't bring any trick-or-treaters to the Pinard household past 9 p.m. on Halloween. He may call in a SWAT team to remove them from his porch.

I hate to say this, but the U.S. Olympic Basketball Team is getting to be a bunch of cocky, arrogant jerks. Call me unpatriotic, but come Olympics time I'm pulling for the Lithuanians. With players like Rimas Kurtinaitis, Valdemaras Khomichus and Golden State Warriors' Sarunus Marciulionus, you've got to love these guys for their names alone.

Peter Hartlaub is a journalism junior and opinion editor of Mustang Daily. Peter will die happy if he plays HORSE with Sarunus Marciulionus at some point during his lifetime.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Reporter didn't tell full story

The September 27 opinion article by Ted Holz was informative. I am glad the title of the course "Irrigation Water Management" was spelled correctly in the article; it was the only aspect of the comments on that subject that were accurate. Please note the following:

1. Students touch a sprinkler only once or twice in the class.
2. The class does not even consider yards or landscapes.
3. No student is "forced" to take the class as part of a general education requirement.
4. Irrigation accounts for 85% of California's diverted water, regardless of one's political or philosophical views regarding water use and allocation within the state, one cannot ignore the tremendous economic and environmental impacts of irrigation. One option for involved people is to learn more about the technical aspects of irrigation so that problems and solutions can be discussed with intelligence; the class of Irrigation Water Management is a start in that direction.

5. The cartoon depicts a typical agriculture professor as a country bumpkin. Those of us in agriculture who have Ph.D. degrees, have several years of advanced math which only started with calculus, and have traveled throughout the U.S. and the world making contributions and understanding different societies, sense that some students need a broader education in order to avoid making such incorrect generalizations.

I would like to thank Ted Holz for demonstrating the importance of broader general education options for some students at Cal Poly.

CSU chancellor should not have received $500,000 to fix home

The Issue: Barry Munitz, chancellor of the Cal State Universities, accepting $500,000 to remodel and decorate portions of his Long Beach home.

Nobody at Cal Poly needs to be reminded that we are looking at hard times in the California State University system.

We are faced daily with that fact in the form of higher fees, cancelled classes and faculty job loss. As long as we are facing these hardships, our chancellor should not be living in an unnecessary state of luxury.

Chancellor Munitz should not have received half a million dollars to renovate his home.

While Munitz claims that the funds are restricted only for use on the chancellor's home, and could not be used for anything else, it is the symbolism of his actions that make them insulting.

Munitz also stated that his home needs to look good so he can conduct university business and raise funds from potential contributors. This logic does not hold. Having a nice home would give potential contributors the idea that the Cal State University system is financially stable.

Included in Chancellor Munitz's renovations are the enlargement of his kitchen and dining room, new plumbing in the bathrooms and the addition of a stained-glass window above the bathtub in his master bathroom.

How many potential contributors will Chancellor Munitz be entertaining in his bathtub? What will his wife say about this? Will any of these questions ever be answered?

As Cal Poly students and faculty, you probably have many questions of your own for Chancellor Munitz. Will I have to scrape up another $60 for my tuition next year? Will I receive my layoff notice soon? Will I ever get used to the noise of this bulldozer outside my classroom window?

Below is Chancellor Munitz's address and a special message from Cal Poly. Mustang Daily urges you to send this message or make one of your own to show concern about where our spending priorities lie in the California State University system.

Office of Chancellor Munitz
400 Golden Shore
Long Beach, CA. 90802-4275

Chancellor Munitz:

As hard working students and faculty members, we at Cal Poly are disturbed to hear where our state funds are going. While fees rise 20%, more than a thousand faculty are laid off and more than 4,000 classes are cancelled in the California State University, it is upsetting to hear that $500,000 of state funds for higher education has gone to remodel your home.

While not everyone at Cal Poly holds religious beliefs, we are praying together as a university that your newly installed plumbing backs up in the middle of the night, and you have to stay at the Motel 6 down the road.

Sincerely,

Member of the Cal Poly community

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Pardon me, Ted Holz, but would you mind looking at the Cal Poly catalog for a second? Did you see, under the GEB F.2 requirements, any courses entitled Residential Household Equipment, Poultry Propagation, or Swine Waste Management? We all know that serious problems do exist at Cal Poly concerning availability of courses, however, it is a naive attempt to be sarcastic using classes that cannot concern you... they do not exist!

It must be very upsetting to some to have an extra class during the five years or so pursuing a "well-rounded education" here. "Poly" is a neat abbreviation for "Polytechnic"; definition: "of or providing instruction in many scientific or technical subjects" (Webster). Being a technical school, this institution differs from the CSU system by requiring the GEB F.2 section. It has every right to do so by name.

Have you ever taken a real F.2 class, such as Introductory Soils? I admit, I was also turned off a bit by the name, yet my major demanded my enrollment in this course. It turned out to be one of the better classes I've had, dealing with important issues and solutions to erosion, soil changes by man and time, identification for different usages, etc. Don't knock it 'till you try it.

This section of courses allows for that well-rounded education to develop, instead of graduating Cal Poly students as cloned, walking textbooks.

Rush promotes sexist image

This is an open letter to the boys of Delta Sigma Phi, but hopefully will give the entire Greek system something to ponder. Apparently, there is no such thing as a dry rush as I see you hoped to soak your pledges in their own drool as they ogled a local stripper at a rush event. I could not believe the gall you displayed in your ad which stated "See her first at" followed by your letters and address.

Every time there is a sexual assault anywhere near a Greek function you want to defend your honorable pride. I am not fooled.

You wish to recruit decent rushers with this tempting offering? You will never shed your sexist image until you tear down your facade of words and start acting like real men, not horny boys.

Don't push this away as fraternity bashing. I've despised the Greek system for years and have quietly watched too many young students fall into the cloning process of brotherhood and sisterhood. I know worse conditions exist. I've heard from far to many of you exactly what little sisters were for.

Now that your toys have been taken away it is time to grow up and teach your pledges manhood and honor. It goes far beyond keeping secrets about your stupid nicknames.

I urge all rushing students to look around at who they're with and what they're doing (Please don't wave community service at me, even the KKK has blood drives.) College is the time for individual growth, not to try to impress others.

needs. He's done what a good dean should do." Since his early childhood growing up on a farm, agriculture has always been an important part of Carter's life.

"I've always been associated with agriculture, so it's natural that I would have a close affinity for it and understand a lot about it," Carter said.

Carter carried his agricultural roots to Iowa State University, where he earned his bachelor's degree in agricultural education in 1953. After serving as an intelligence officer in the U.S. Air Force, he returned to Iowa State to complete his master's degree and received his doctorate in agronomy in 1960.

Carter began his academic career as a research associate at Iowa State University in 1959. In 1960 he accepted a position as assistant professor of agronomy at Montana State University. He later became associate dean of Agriculture and assistant director of the Montana Agricultural Experiment Station.

In 1980, he directed the United States Department of Agriculture Higher Education Programs Office in Washington, D.C.

Carter has been involved in many national agricultural and educational committees and boards, but according to Joette Eisengart, assistant to the dean of the School of Agriculture, students are his number-one priority.

"With every decision, there's always the factor of how it will affect the students," Eisengart said. "Basically, in all of his decision making, the human factor is really the most important part."

Carter said that one of the philosophies of the dean of Agriculture's office is that the administration is there to serve the students.

"I have always tried to keep an open door policy so that students can feel welcome to come in and talk to us here," he said. "I have put a high priority on being involved with the students, especially with their co-curricular activities and counseling them whenever they come in. I think we have kept that open feeling that's very important to students."

Educating the masses

Thousands of students have graduated from programs that Carter has been involved in, whether at Iowa State, Montana State or Cal Poly.

Despite concerns over the budget process, Carter is optimistic about the future of the School of Agriculture.

"We have overcome problems where the budget process is concerned, and we haven't solved everything. But I think we have done our best with the resources that are available."

Carter has played a part in a myriad School of Agriculture projects and programs. Among the more satisfying things he said he has seen through the last 10 years are the professional development of faculty, changes in the curricula and the continuing commitment to a strong program.

One of his main goals when he first arrived was to improve the facilities associated with the School of Agriculture.

He has been instrumental in the establishment of the Agricultural Sciences building and dairy technology center, and the remodeling of the Erhart Agriculture building and the animal science arena.

"It isn't a bad feeling that I leave with," he said. "I've been in administration for almost 30 years and I've concluded that it's time for me to step out of the administration at the university level and look into some other interests."

Plans for the future

Carter plans to resume his teaching career as a crop scientist and agronomist at Cal Poly.

"I considered myself to be a good teacher," he said, "and I think I could be a very good teacher again. I would just need some time to prepare the classes I would teach."

In addition, he will work on the revision of a textbook he coauthored, and he will look at the possibility of bringing Ag SAT to the Cal Poly campus.

Ag SAT is a teleconferencing program via satellite featuring leading agriculture professors from across the country.

Carter is also considering short-term job opportunities with the State department in Washington, D.C., the United States Department of Agriculture and FAO in Rome, with plans to return to Cal Poly after one or two years.

U.S. citizen, in good health and at least 18 years old. There is no upper age limit.

Since the Peace Corps began in 1961, about 130,000 volunteers have served overseas, not only in education, but also in agriculture, health, natural resources, conservation, business, skilled trades and other areas.

Currently there are about 6,500 people serving as volunteers, according to Jeff Carnahan, former Peace Corps graduate coordinator. "We would like to see 10,000 volunteers by 1995," he said.

Carnahan, who served his two-year assignment in the Federated States of Micronesia, said that the Peace Corps offers the opportunity for a person to acquire an intimate understanding of today's diverse global community.

"It was a chance for personal growth and professional growth," Carnahan said. "And it gave me a personal understanding of what it's like in developing countries."

chemistry, physics and math departments. He said the location was a major separation from all the student activity.

Another concern Keeling and Houlis share about the new building is that the narrow halls may serve as an intimidation factor to many of the students. Houlis said the halls are loud, making many of the faculty members shut their doors. He said the narrowness of the halls could also result in a quick build up of students waiting to see their advisers.

"If I have a bunch of students coming to see me at around the same time, where are they going to sit? There is no place for them to wait or read notes," Houlis said.

A popular opinion of the students who have seen or walked in the building is that they like the modern design and the improved accessibility of the offices.

"It looks really nice and is more updated than all of the other buildings," said agribusiness senior Nancy Vigna. "It fits in well."

Koob, vice president of Academic Affairs.

"We are working very hard to keep the quality up," he said, but admitted that it is difficult to adjust to these large cuts in such a short time.

"The quality of the faculty and students is good, which is absolutely bizarre because we are so compacted," Busselen said. They tried not to destroy programs but the flexibility was taken away, he said.

Room for flexibility is scarce in the P.E. department, which has seen many of its class sections severely reduced. P.E., for example, now only has one jogging class, a few swimming classes and no golf.

The athletic department has not escaped the knife either, Vochatzer said. The track and cross country teams will have to do more fund-raisers this year in order to pay for uniforms, shoes and travel expenses, she said.

The School of Professional Studies is heading a $500,000 fund-raising campaign in hopes of regaining faculty positions by next January, said Busselen. Letters will be sent out to 13,000 alumni asking for donations. If that does not work, phone campaigning will follow, Busselen said.

If the budget cuts get worse, Cal Poly will continue to get smaller, said Koob.

Proportionately, Cal Poly is doing about the same in the number of courses cut compared to last year, said Debbie A. Arseneau, the university class scheduler. Last fall there were 3,810 sections and 315 were cancelled, this fall 3,650 sections were offered and 374 were cancelled, said Arseneau.

In the meantime, Cal Poly has closed spring admissions in order to loosen some of the congestion. If this does not help, Busselen said Cal Poly should consider switching to a semester system. This would enable more students to take more units and therefore graduate more quickly, he said.
