Biographical Notes

Norman Clyde

Legendary Mountaineer Norman Asa Clyde was born April 8, 1885, in Philadelphia, the descendant of Irish and American parents. His father, Charles Clyde, was born in Antrim County, Northern Ireland and his mother, Sarah Isabelle Purvis, a native of Glade Mills, Pennsylvania, was from an established Irish family. A Reformed Presbyterian minister, Charles Clyde died at the age of 46, which forced sixteen-year-old Norman to assume a position of responsibility in the family.

Norman graduated from Geneva College in Pennsylvania in 1909. He worked his way west to California and the Sierra Nevada, taking on a number of jobs along the way, and was a high school teacher in North Dakota, Utah, and Arizona. Teaching enabled him to explore the Sierra Nevada during the summer.

In 1914 Clyde made first ascents of Electra Peak, Mt. Parker, and Foerster Peak. He married Winifred May Bolster in 1915, and after her death in 1919 he spent even more time in the Sierra. In 1928, Clyde menaced students with a firearm, ending his career as a principal at Independence High School near the Owens Valley. As a member of the Sierra Club, Clyde found work and a home.

During his lifetime he explored and ascended hundreds of peaks in the mountain ranges of western North America, from Mt. Robson in the Canadian Rockies to El Picacho del Diablo in Baja California. In Who Was Who in America, Clyde is described as an explorer of western mountains, and is given credit for making over 1,000 ascents, to include 200 first ascents, as well as mapping new routes. In 1932, Clyde established a world record by climbing a mountain a day during a 36-day hike through Glacier National Park. Mountain features named after Norman Clyde in the Sierra Nevada include Clyde’s Minaret, Clyde’s Spires, Clyde’s Ledge, Clyde Meadow and Clyde Peak.

He honed his outdoor skills over a lifetime. He was remarkably self sufficient and skilled at a variety of tasks, including not only rock climbing and mountaineering but skiing, snow-shoeing, fishing, hunting, axemanship, and mountain rescue.

In addition to being a mountaineer, guide, rescuer and prolific writer, Clyde was a scholar who read the Classics in their original language. He was well read, and knowledgeable in a broad spectrum of disciplines, in the arts and humanities as well as the natural sciences. A prolific author, he wrote many articles for the popular press and for mountain journals. And, contrary to popular belief, he was not a hermit, but in the winter season could often be found in the Los Angeles or San Francisco Bay regions, visiting with friends, replenishing his supply of reading material, and planning new excursions.

Clyde and his colleagues Jules Eichorn, Glen Dawson, owner of Dawson’s Book Shop in Los Angeles, and expert climber Robert L.M. Underhill were the first climbers to ascend the difficult east face of Mt. Whitney in 1931. Underhill introduced the techniques of roped climbing and belays to climbers in the Sierra. Eichorn and Dawson remained his friends.

His exploits as a searcher for lost climbers include some of the most dramatic stories of tragedy, triumph and heroism that have ever taken place in the annals of California history. In 1933 Clyde discovered the remains of avid climber Walter A. Starr, Jr. on Michael Minaret following a grueling month-long search by dozens of government workers and volunteers. Starr’s Guide to the John Muir Trail and the High Sierra Region was published the following year by the Sierra Club. Clyde also located the bodies of Anna and Conrad Rettenbacher and the crew of a downed Army Air Corps B-18 plane.

Among climbers and skiers, his legend has outdistanced him; among the general population he has been forgotten. Yet Clyde’s contributions to the exploration and description of the Sierra Nevada and to the field of mountaineering are important and long ranging, and deserve to be known by a wider audience. He once said that he “came between the pioneers and the rock climbers.” Because of the immense size of his pack, long-time Sierra Club President David Brower described Clyde as “the pack that walked like a man.”

Clyde received an honorary Doctor of Science degree from Geneva College in 1939. In 1970 he was presented the first Francis Farquhar Mountaineering Award from the Sierra Club. In the same year, at the age of 85, he went on his last Sierra Club outing. In 1971, he was on hand to sign copies of his book Norman Clyde: Rambles Through the Range of Light published by Scrimshaw Press.

Norman Clyde died on December 23, 1972, in Big Pine, California. In 1974, the U.S. Board on Geographic Names bestowed his name on a prominent peak and glacier in the Sierra Nevada.

Robert C. Pavlik

Robert C. Pavlik is a Supervising Environmental Planner with the California Department of Transportation. A native of Cleveland, Ohio, he was raised in the San Fernando Valley, but grew up in the mountains of California, hiking, climbing, and traveling to remote places of quiet beauty throughout the state. He graduated with a degree in Liberal Studies and Anthropology from California State University, Northridge in 1979, and received a teaching credential from San Francisco State University in 1981.

He has worked as a State Park Ranger in Big Sur, an Environmental Education Instructor in Yosemite National Park, and as an historian for the National Park Service in Yosemite. Following the completion of his M.A. degree in the Public Historical Studies program at University of California, Santa Barbara he worked for over six years as State Historian at Hearst San Simeon State Historical Monument. Bob has published articles and book reviews in several magazines, journals, and newspapers, including California History, The Californians, Yosemite, The Public Historian, Material Culture, California History Action, Washington Free Press, and Oral History Review. His poetry has appeared in the San Luis Obispo Tribune.
One of Pavlik’s primary goals when writing the biography was to restore Norman Clyde to his place in history. He compares Clyde with historical figures John C. Fremont, Joseph Walker, and Jedediah Smith, and even poet Robinson Jeffers, pointing out that Clyde didn’t need to explore or traverse the mountains like other trailblazers and poets; he lived in them for over 60 years as a guide, naturalist and writer.

Scope and Content

The Norman Clyde-Robert C. Pavlik Collection is a record of biographer Robert Pavlik’s research and writing for his book, Norman Clyde: Legendary Mountaineer of California’s Sierra Nevada, published in 2008 by Heyday Books of Berkeley. The collection adds substance and dimension to the Norman Clyde story, and also reveals the exacting and methodical labor undertaken by Pavlik to research, interview, write, and prepare his work for publication.

The collection includes Pavlik’s correspondence and interviews with Norman Clyde’s family members, friends, and fellow climbers and outdoorsmen. There is an abundance of articles by and about Norman Clyde, and the amount of research notes and materials collected by Pavlik is substantial.

Series 1 contains correspondence, personal papers, and other primary sources belonging to Norman Clyde, which were given to Pavlik in the course of his research. Also included are articles written by Clyde and Pavlik’s transcriptions of Clyde’s correspondence from the Bancroft Library and the Eastern California Museum at Independence.

In the collection’s primary and secondary sources, articles by and about Clyde respectively, there are articles Pavlik found in the American Alpine Club Journal, the Sierra Club Bulletin, the Geneva Cabinet, as well as the National Motorist, Motor Land and Touring Tropics.

The genesis of the book took place in 1984 when Pavlik was doing graduate work at the University of California, Santa Barbara. Harold C. Kirker, professor of U.S. Cultural History and author, suggested that he do a paper on Norman Clyde. Kirker had been a member of the Sierra Club, along with Clyde, in the 1930s. In addition to the correspondence between Pavlik and Kirker about Clyde in Series 2, there is extensive correspondence between them on a variety of topics to include book publishing in Series 4 of the collection.

Series 3, Subject Files and Secondary Sources of Norman Clyde, contain Pavlik’s research on Clyde’s interest and abilities in specific areas, such as skiing, natural history, photography, fishing, hunting and a fondness for firearms. A subject file on Walter A. Starr, Jr., includes newspaper and magazine articles, as well as Pavlik correspondence, a transcript of an interview, and transcriptions of correspondence.

Series 4 contain Pavlik’s correspondence with book publishers, reader notes, and book marketing as well as drafts of the manuscript.

Photographs of Norman Clyde, his family and mountains are included in Series 1, 3 and 4.

Where possible, the provenance, or original organization, of the papers has been preserved. However, in order to simplify access to the collection for researchers, some materials in specific formats and topics were reorganized and refoldered to more accurately reflect their contents.

The Norman Clyde-Robert C. Pavlik Collection is housed in 11 boxes, with Norman Clyde Book Files, Norman Clyde Primary Sources, and Research Files on Norman Clyde containing the most extensive portions of the collection. The collection is divided into four series:

Series 1: Norman Clyde Primary Sources, 1906-c. 2000
Series 2: Research Files on Norman Clyde, 1910-2009
Series 3: Subject Files and Secondary Sources on Norman Clyde, 1923-2009
Series 4: Norman Clyde: Legendary Mountaineer Book Files, 1984-2009

All cities and counties listed on folder headings are located in California, unless noted otherwise.
