The Passing Of A Champion

(With Apologies to Bobb. Service)

By Paul Nelson

A bunch of the boys who were whupping it up in the El Corral one noon,

The joke box in the corner was subtly a be­ hop.

At the hilliard table, with a crooked cue, stood

Dangerous Dan McClain.

Watching his luck there was a crowd, and the air with smoke was blue.

When 'out' of the ball, which is just outside, and into the din and place,

there stumbled a freshman, fresh from the farm,

and his face was as brown as his hair.

He looked like a kid who was green as they came, and ne'erday as bold as a mouse.

Yet he emitted his pockets of all their change, and called for biles for the house.

There was none could place the freshman's face, though we searched ourselves for a clue,

But he shouldn't leave his way, 'til he stood face to face with Dangerous Dan McClain.

"Dan," he said, "I guess I'll play," and he picked up another cue.

The room grew still as a sneer crossed the face of Dangerous Dan McClain;

"Bare Kid," he said, as the class bell rang,
but nobody ventured to go.

For Dan was the champ, but the kid was grim,

and this might mean a show.

And the boys all knew that the game would be close, as they knocked in ball after ball.

There were wagers and bets, and thought, fully, someone closed the door to the ball.

The battle was reaching the climax now, and you couldn't hear a sound.

But the tick of the clock, and an uneasy stir, as the eight ball came around.

Then was the shot that counted, and Dan drew back his cup.

Then he smacked it home, and there wasn't a doubt but what the game was through.

For he made the eight, in the pocket he'd called, and every man there knew.

The room grew still as a sneer crossed the face, though we searched ourselves for a clue,

and into the din and glare,

picked up another cue.

For Dan was the champ, but the kid was grim,

and this might mean a show.

Did You Buy Your Card?

Many students have asked the money derived from the sale of these cards serves as the income your student body organization

Landscaping
For Library
This Month

Come autumn, Poly's new library will blossom forth with a brand new exterior. Excavation on the underlying rock on the library grounds will start early this fall. The front will be landscaped with a wide array of plants and trees. The glass shows a large line of plants that will be started in several batches at various vantage points along the wall.

Single parking facilities will be available on the North and West sides. To the side of the pavilion, six to eight foot walls will lead up to the main entrance of the library.

A great many man hours will be saved by the addition of a complete set of automatic sprinklers which will be installed on the proposed area. One full time gardener will be in charge of both the new library and the administration building.

With fall quarter just around the corner, the future looks promising for the very near future, we can look forward to seeing the development of this project.

Oh, and before you forget, on this autumn day, the administration building will be constructed.

Glenn A. Noble
Campus Personality

If we had to make a list of faculty members of highly interesting background, Dr. Glenn A. Noble, chairman of the Department of Biological Sciences, would certainly be on the front page.

The son of an American missionary, Noble spent his early childhood in Korea and learned the native language in his early childhood. After finishing his education at Stanford University of California to study zoology, earning a B.S. and a Ph.D. at Stanford University.

While he was acting as a consultant for the American Military Government in Korea, Noble gave his own time to teach laboratory subjects to Koreans who were confined to a camp in South Korea. Noble was for ten years head of the Department of Biology of San Francisco City College and has done research in bee hives for the Panama Canal Company. Confirmation of his high standing as a scientist is the fact that he has been listed in "American Men of Science."

Married and with three daughters, Noble has built his own home in San Luis Obispo. He has a twin brother who has followed the same career, and is Chairman of the Department of Biology at State College of Washington. He joins his own work and believes that Poly is the ideal educational program. His department is offering a major in Biological Science.

The enrollment this year at Cal Poly is expected to be the largest in the history of the school. Approximately 2,000 students are expected to be parked on the campus, which has parking space for 1,200 cars. This is especially true in the area around the post office. Also driving on Santa Rosa and Monterey streets will have to drive with caution.

Cucasian Printers will not only be expected to be parked on the campus, but will also have a good representation of students in the reserved parking area.
