Veteran’s News

Veterans with service since the start of the Korean campaign who are planning to go to school under the GI Bill II are advised by the Veterans Administration to take along enough money of their own to tide them over for about two months.

The reason, VA explained, is that under the law, GI education and training allowances can’t be paid until some time after a veteran actually completes each month of training.

The law also requires that the veteran’s or his school’s or training establishment’s records show that he is actually engaged in full-time training for the entire initial month of training.

This takes time on VA’s records, schools to get the certifications in as quickly as possible after the end of the month to keep the time in as a minimum.

After VA receives the certifications, it must compute how much each vet is entitled to.

The allowances for 1952 training full-time in schools and colleges is $16 monthly for those without dependents, $160 for those with one dependent, and $220 for those with two or more dependents.

If you come under any of those laws, go see Howard E. Harlow, the officer in charge of the Veterans Administration office in Crandall.

UNESCO’S Problems

To Sell Polites

UNESCO, its beginning, aims, accomplishments and problems, will be described by Capt. Gene Crawford, UN staff member, at a noon lecture next Thursday, Oct. 24 in the engineering auditorium of California State College at Los Angeles, Affairs political, economic, social and of the college.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization was formed as an educational arm of the UN, the speaker said, designed to spread the free flow of information between peoples of all nations in an attempt to do away with misunderstandings that are as nationalistic, lead to wars.

"Since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that we must build the defenses of peace," Dr. Quillen said.

Observing that the United States participated in UNESCO by reason of its desire to spread the free flow of information between peoples, the speaker said that strong support has been offered the group by education leaders as well as prominent church leaders.

"However, members of UNESCO do not agree on all policies or educational problems, and all democracies agree with the United States on the general government," he remarked.

"The United States cannot stand alone against a hostile world," Quillen said, stressing the importance of bringing people of the world into closer harmony through understanding and tolerance.
