Help Underprivileged Help Themselves; Peace Corps

By Mike Carbin

In a remote, backwoods area, somewhere deep in the heart of South-East Asia, people are starving. In central India, millions are both poverty stricken and illiterate. Confined to his own region, the average American is completely unaware of the international problems that involve him. The Peace Corps, a United States governmental agency, introduced a solution over two months ago. The solution would include thousands of college students who would undergo international training to help underdeveloped nations by saving suffering from two of the most consuming factors: poverty and illiteracy.

This week, two months after the founding of the Peace Corps, nearly 60,000 college students will be given the opportunity to go over the country. Invitations will be sent to students and potentially eligible college students will have been chosen.

The Peace Corps volunteer is a young man or woman with a college degree. He is selected from the Peace Corps volunteer activities. These activities are designed to meet the needs of developing countries, particularly those with a great need for manpower. The main objective is to help underdeveloped countries by helping them meet their manpower needs. The Peace Corps volunteer is to contribute his services in such fields as public health, education, agriculture, and economic development, and to live in the countryside.

Underdeveloped countries are those which have a high poverty level, a low literacy rate, and a lack of trained personnel. The Peace Corps volunteer is to help these countries by teaching, training, and advising. The Peace Corps volunteer is to work with the local people, learn from them, and adapt his work to their needs.

The Peace Corps volunteer is to be a member of a small team, working under the direction of a local person. The Peace Corps volunteer is to be a member of a team that will work on a specific project, such as a hospital, a school, or a farm. The Peace Corps volunteer is to be a member of a team that will work on a project that is relevant to the needs of the country.

The Peace Corps volunteer is to be a member of a team that will work on a project that is consistent with the policies of the United States government.
