Cal Poly's Agricultural Division was described as making "a significant impact on economic and social developments throughout the world" in a letter which Pres- ident Julian A. McPherson recently received from the American Agricultural Economics Section of the United States Department of Agriculture.

McPherson's letter was written in response to the announcement of a new degree program in agricultural economics at the University of California at Davis. The program will be offered in cooperation with the American Agricultural Economics Section of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The new degree program will provide students with a strong foundation in the principles of agricultural economics, as well as an opportunity to specialize in specific areas of interest. Students will have the option to pursue concentrations in such areas as agricultural policy, agricultural development, and agricultural marketing.

The program will include a combination of coursework and practical experience. Students will have the opportunity to work on internships or research projects, helping to address real-world problems in the agricultural sector.

In addition to coursework and internships, the program will also offer opportunities for students to engage in community service, through partnerships with local farmers and agribusinesses.

The new degree program is expected to attract a diverse group of students, including those with a background in economics, business, and agriculture. It is designed to prepare students for a variety of careers in the agricultural sector, including positions in government, policy analysis, and private industry.

The program is being offered in collaboration with the American Agricultural Economics Section of the United States Department of Agriculture. The section works to advance the understanding and application of agricultural economics, with a focus on addressing the challenges facing the agricultural sector.

Students who complete the new degree program will be well-prepared to make a significant impact on the agricultural sector, helping to address the complex challenges facing the industry and contributing to the development of innovative solutions.

In conclusion, the establishment of this new degree program at the University of California at Davis is a significant step forward in the field of agricultural economics. It offers students a unique opportunity to gain valuable experience and prepare for a successful career in the agricultural sector.

The program is expected to attract a diverse group of students, and the collaboration with the American Agricultural Economics Section of the United States Department of Agriculture will help to ensure that students receive a strong foundation in the principles of agricultural economics.

Overall, the new degree program is a valuable addition to the offerings of the University of California at Davis, and it is expected to have a significant impact on the agricultural sector.
Horse Breeding Program Featured in Publication

"Cal Poly's Thoroughbred Breeding Program" is the title of an article in the August issue of the "Thoroughbred Record" magazine. It is by Cal Poly Animal Husbandry Instructor, James R. Flanigan.

In the article, Flanigan describes the Cal Poly horse breeding program, which has come full circle from 1936 to 1940 to the present. He explains the progression of the program in recent years, which includes the establishment of a new horse teaching lab and addition of several new classrooms for horse instruction.

Flanigan also makes mention of the expansion of facilities for the college's horse breeding program. A new warehouse and stable were included in the program, which will enable the college to continue its breeding program.

Figure of 16 recently in recent headlines has been the John Birch Society. The group started out as a small group of people who felt that the government was not adequately protecting the country from outside threats. The group has grown in recent years and has become more visible in the media.

They have gained notoriety for their bomb threats, which have been made against various government buildings and military installations.

A report on the legislature was the topic of a speech given at a luncheon held in honor of Senator Vernon Stuflberg in the State Dining Room recently.

The speech was introduced by Dr. W. E. Hembright, head of the Education Department. Stuflberg gave a report and a brief interpretation of the other bills which came up in the legislature.

He said, "I am not sure of the results that the legislature will have. But I have a high interest for education."
