Zambian Phys Ed Student Trains To Help A New African Republic

By JOSEPH BERNILLA

John Challenge, a native student majoring in Physical Education, is one of the 15000 Zambian country's students showing the world of development and understanding. John was born in 1965 in Zambia.

The African American was the first educated in the United States. After completing his high school requirements at Polytechnic College, he went on to attend the University of Oregon, where he graduated in 1985 with a degree in Physical Education.

John went to the United States to study because he wanted to make a difference in his country. He realized that education and training could help his country achieve independence.

John trained as a physical education teacher in Oregon. His objective of the party was to implement the Chiluba campaign, which aimed to make the country independent of South Africa.

John trained for seven hours for an interview. After having been a merchandising salesperson, he later became a physical education teacher. He served in the Chiluba campaign for a year, during which time he helped the party achieve its goal.

John was a vital member of the party, and his efforts were recognized. He was given the opportunity to cycle 100 miles in one session for an interview.

John's dedication and hard work helped his country achieve independence. His story is an inspiration to young people around the world, showing that education and training can make a difference in achieving national goals.
