Seminar, show on computers in ag set for Nov. 10-11

Cal Poly will be the site for the first Cal Poly-Computers for Agriculture Seminar and Exhibit on Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 10 and 11.

The event, expected to attract 1,000 participants, will be cosponsored by the university and Computers for Agriculture. Fifty exhibitors and as many workshop speakers also will be involved.

Computers for Agriculture, a four-year-old organization based in Sacramento, is involved in the planning and staging of conferences and exhibits on the use of computer technology in a wide range of agricultural operations.

The format for the seminar and exhibit at Cal Poly will be similar to a conference and trade fair sponsored by Computers for Agriculture each January in Sacramento. Numerous workshops will be conducted concurrently by experts in all phases of computer applications to farming, ranching and related industries.

Lyn Hawkins of Computers for Agriculture, co-chairman of the event with William K. Michaud, a computer specialist in Cal Poly's Agricultural Management Department, said the goal is to attract farmers, accountants, pest-control advisers, implement dealers and other suppliers, transportation and real-estate people, and students.

Those interested in attending the seminar and show may contact Computers for Agriculture, 8701 Celery Court, Elk Grove, CA 95624. The phone number is 916-685-2219. Firms interested in reserving space for exhibits should write or telephone Computers for Agriculture.
