Letters to the Editor: Clarification made

Editor:
The story which appeared in Mustang Daily, dated Wednesday, April 10, 1985, on page 2 entitled "Scholarly Anglers to Find Literary Catch in Library," is full of errors. Since my name appears mentioned with the information given in the article, I would like to clarify several statements.

In the first place, the spelling of the word "attendable" is incorrect. There is no such thing as a current list in library terminology. "Attendable" is a transcription of film on microfilm for four or eight inches capable of storing 40 pages of copy. So for all intents and purposes "attendable" should be considered one of our important tools available to bound volumes and on microfilm, free.

The above bound volume found in the library dates back to 1884, however, the library has only two titles which have an imprint before 1900. Unfortunately not all library users show respect for the rights of scholars to find literary catch in the library. If a replacement copy is not available, other titles are replaced by this issue. If a rebound volume is not available, the library has on occasion obtained copies that are replaced by this issue. If a replacement copy is not available, the library does not have any back files on issues that we need. Even when I referred to clarify several statements.
