Library rated excellent

The Government Documents and Maps Department of Cal Poly's Robert E. Kennedy Library has been rated among the nation's best document depositories after an evaluation by an inspector from the United States Government Printing Office.

The government document depository at Cal Poly "received an almost unheard of 'excellent' rating in each of the eight categories of inspection," said David B. Walch, director of the library.

Michael F. DiMario, superintendent of documents for the U.S. Government Printing Office, stated that the rating "places your library among a select vanguard of pacesetters serving as creative models for depository documents service in the United States" in his letter regarding the evaluation.

Government document depositories, which are libraries nominated by Congressmen to become selective depositories of documents printed by the federal and state governments, must receive a minimum of "good" to be judged adequate in the areas evaluated, said DiMario.

Chi Su Kim, head of the Cal Poly library's Documents and Maps Department, said the department's collection of over one million documents includes Congressional publications, as well as administrative reports and research reports from various governmental agencies.
