Senator George McGovern announced his Democratic presidential candidacy Monday, promising to quickly pull every U.S. soldier out of Vietnam and calling for a "second American revolution" to overhaul the nation's policies and priorities.

He said, "We must have the courage to admit that however sincere our motives, we made a dreadful mistake in trying to settle the affairs of the Vietnamese people with American troops and bombers," he said. "In fact, I believe this is our only hope for avoiding the ugly violence that now tempts many desperate people."

The other day I overheard a student remark, "I can't believe how backward this town is. Imagine—fighting to keep a gas station from being constructed on a worthless corner lot. They're so afraid of progress.

I'd like to address myself to anyone who may have similar feelings on the "Gas Station" issue as this particular student did.

Have you been down to the Los Angeles area lately? Have you seen the miles of rooftops, the wrests of apartments and of course, the four gas stations that guard every intersection? Have you seen the results of this "sardine can" environment? Look and see, and then to tell me that that's progress. Try to tell me that we're building a better world by enveloping every usable square inch of earth.

Every day we see the results of our haphazard growth which we call progress. Man is a sensible animal. I just hope that he comes to his senses before it's too late.

Two attend Urbana '70

Students from this college who attended Urbana '70, the missionary convention of Inter-Variety Christian Fellowship, last month at the University of Illinois heard a series of provocative talks on world issues as they affect the expansion of the Christian faith.

Convention delegates were challenged by missionary speakers to help the needs of blacks and other minorities in this country, to help expand Christian testimony in communist countries, and to be available for Christian service anywhere.

Samuel Escobar, Argentine editor of the magazine Certesa, speaking on "Social Concern and World Evangelism," explained the traditional reluctance of evangelical Christians to display social enterprise or membership in a real estate owners association.

"Middle class captivity" of the church is most evident, he said in its weakened notion of sin.

"We have reduced sin to those outward signs of violation, the behavior which are shocking to middle class people. We are against the violence of the alcoholic who beats his wife or a terrorist who blows a computer," Escobar said.

"But there is a violence that does not need to act violently, but pay and organise others to do so. Marx and Marcuse describe adequately the way in which the middle class people may be involved in this," Escobar warned.

According to Murphy, more drug cases are being handed down as misdemeanors in the justice courts. A period of probation and a fine is usually the sentence handed down in these cases. The fines can be paid in a "type of "time plan." "In this way, the offender is reminded monthly that he has committed an offense, and hopefully won't commit his offense again."

"The idea of being lost doesn't jive with our idea of God as our 'Big Buddy upstairs,'" Ford said.

"Evangelism is one beggar telling another where he may find bread."
Profs writes history on democrats

Robert E. Burton, assistant professor of history at this school, has written a book entitled Democrats of Oregon: The Patterns of Minority Politics, 1900-1945.

This is the first book written on the Oregon Democratic Party in the 20th century.

The author's major objective was to sketch the party history between the years 1900 and 1946 but he also offers a description of the nature of Oregon politics in the 20th century with the impact of national political trends on state affairs.

Burton also comments on the assumption that national politics are based on state politics, and the history of one political party in one state contributes to an understanding of the political life of the nation.

The year 1966 marked a signal success for the Oregon democrats and a turning point in state political affairs, as Oregon became a genuine two-party state with clearly defined issues. The book concludes with a brief discussion of those years following the success of IBM.

Burton is currently preparing an essay on the New Deal in Oregon which will appear in a collection of essays concerning the Impact of the New Deal on the individual states. This essay will be published by Oregon State University Press.

The film to be shown is of the DC-10 flight test program. The weekly activities vary from talking to patients in the visiting room to competitive volleyball and basketball games in the gym, to creative experiences in the occupational therapy shop.

Radio - TV Newscasts

Newscasts, interviews, and special event features will be seen on KCPV-TV closed circuit television in the beach bar of the student union.

Faculty television instructors Ed Zuchelli and Wayne Shaw will advise the productions, which will be completely prepared and presented by students in the Journalism Department.

Daily newscasts at 11 am will be supplemented by live discussions with prominent college, civic, and student leaders, and other live or taped productions. Special sports events, or other outstanding attractions will be carried at various times of the day for student and faculty viewing.

Students who will actively participate in the television productions will be selected from Journalism 434-01 and 434-02.

Zuchelli indicated that future closed circuit plans include outlets in many buildings on the campus as soon as budgeting for cable and equipment can be arranged.

Lobby clinched

AFL President Paul Banks joined other state college presidents Sunday in a vote to create a permanent committee to lobby in Sacramento on behalf of students.

Ten of the 19 state college presidents were present at a meeting of the California State College Presidents Association at Fresno State College.

Originally opposed to the resolution, Banks was strategic in presenting a united front for a unanimous approval after Chico and Sacramento State Colleges changed their votes.

Aero talk

Three speakers and a film will be featured as a program presented by the Aero Alumni Association and AFAI. The program will be in AE 329, Wednesday, Jan. 30 at 7:30 p.m.

The speakers will be: Mr. Tom Wieg, employed by McDonnell Douglas, working in performance and flight testing on the DC-10; John St. John, himself an aerospace engineer, who works for F-5 International at Norport; and Mr. Allen Hume, former BEAF graduate, who will discuss fighter design, performance, stability and control.

The film to be shown is of the DC-10 flight test program. There is no admission charge and the public is invited.

During the thick of the fall football season this school was considered to be the top California team and one of four overall being considered to participate in the Camellia Bowl. The following letter published in the Sacramento Union Dec. 30 is from a woman who felt that the team should have been chosen.

Editor, The Union: The Camellia Bowl Committee has no right. It has a far better team in the pan of its hands this year which could have helped make the gate receipts much bigger. Cal Poly, San Luis Obispo had an 8-3 season. Its offensive line is the best in the country, and its quarterback and passing attack were

"I predicted it," screamed Coach Ritchie as Jon Pedotti, Groggs' kicker, converted a 20 yard penalty kick to supply the missing margin Saturday to down the Gauchos second team 6-3. Previously, Coach Ritchie had said that the return of Pedotti would benefit the team greatly. The Westerners from San Diego State cancelled out, and a combination of "firsts and seconds" played Santa Barbara's seconds. The game was divided into four twenty-minute quarters, allowing free substitution. Consequently, the Groggs' forwards only played the first quarter and the seconds took over in the ensuing periods. The Groggs took a quick 3-0 lead as the "Pigs" pushed the ball to the try line and Rich Colombo smartly torched it down. Jon Cristol missed the point after. Within minutes, the Groggs covered the field to add another try, as the back line got the ball out quickly to Doug Maul, who touched it down, to make it 6-0. The Groggs were in danger now, as they drew a penalty kick against them, which the Santa Barbara side converted to make the score 6-3, in the locker.

Sloppy field conditions slowed the quick San Luis club, but they

Foreign car club presents annual economy rallye

Another edition of "the oldest continually held economy run in the U.S.A." is scheduled for Sunday, Jan. 23. El Camino Foreign Car Club will present its fourteenth annual fuel economy rallye at 1 p.m. at the Madonna Plaza Texaco station.

Chuck Davis, event chairman, said the rallye route will follow a scenic network of public roads and highways, and that there will be no need for special rallye equipment.

Cheap eats

Food in the United States is a bargain, according to Clifford Hardin, Secretary of Agriculture. Hardin says: "In terms of income, in terms of working time, and in terms of other countries, food in America is a good buy, the best it has been." The Secretary reported that "U.S. consumers spend only 14/4 cents of each dollar for food, and the food share continues to decline each year.

Next Saturday, January 13, the Groggs will find out how good their club is, as they will play the always strong L.S. Rugby Club at 1 p.m. on the soccer field.
