A Drug To Clear The Blur Of Booze

Funding Child Care

Students whose children attend the ASI Children's Center should throw a temper tantrum if the ASI refuses their request for a subsidy next year.

The Children's Center is legitimately entitled to the $4,178 subsidy for the 1976-77 academic year which the ASI Finance Committee is considering. A story in Mustang Daily pointed out the Children's Center is seeking ASI funds to meet higher costs caused primarily by state mandated pay raises.

The ASI governors have a duty to give the children's center ample time to find other sources of revenue. The students are not asking for a subsidy; instead they want to pay for the Children's Center rather than receive a subsidy. Students are now paying $20 for their ASI fees. They would pay $25 if the center was not subsidized. Therefore, the students should be paying for the center.

The group should go to the ASI Finance Committee and try to convince them to pay for the center. If the committee refuses, the students should try to raise the $25 fee for the center themselves. This would put the center within reach of most students. Therefore, they would probably have to raise pay raises.

The Finance Committee must be responsive enough to meet the changing needs of the Children's Center because when the center was set-up in 1973 it was originally believed that it should be self-supporting after the first year. This was probably unrealistic to begin with and is now irrelevant. The Finance Committee must be responsive enough to meet the changing needs of the Children's Center.

The question of whether Disabled Student Services should be allowed to use University Union Rem. 102 for an office space and its reduced financial status is an emotional or moral issue, believe University Union Board of Governors members Thomas Teague and Kevin O'Connor.

This is especially true for UUBG because it's concerned about the $15,900 that the pinball machines that occupy the room now rack-in. It's an idra^nmnm for the group because of its central location and easy accessibility. Without a subsidy the Children's Center may go out of business.

The numbers of people involved should not be the issue. The issue should be the quality of the program and what it contributes to the welfare of students rather than the quantities served by the program.

Football games are attended by 5,000 people who get three hours of entertainment. The Children's Center is giving people who get three hours of entertainment. The Finance Committee must be responsive enough to meet the changing needs of the Children's Center because when the center was set-up in 1973 it was originally believed that it should be self-supporting after the first year.

Alcoholics traveling the road to sobriety may find the drug Antabuse a chemical ticket to a vacation of ease and relaxation free from the suppression of inhabiting a drink.

No miracle cure or panacea. Antabuse never the less removes the personal decision in drinking by creating a chemical aversion to alcohol.

Michael Montrose, head of the Alcohol Use and Abuse program here said, "It gives alcoholics a nice break, enables them to get on with other things and helps them to start problem solving."

Michael Montrose, head of the Alcohol Use and Abuse program here said, "It gives alcoholics a nice break, enables them to get on with other things and helps them to start problem solving."

Antabuse, an alcohol, even in small amounts, produces flushing, throbbing in the head and neck, headaches, respiratory difficulty, nausea, vomiting, sweating, strange, unnatural, and blurred vision.

No alcohol — no reaction.

"The desire to become uncontrollably sick," said Looney. "Most alcoholics using the drug are aware of the consequences of drinking and therefore refrain from doing it."

Both Looney and Dr. Grant Miller, staff psychiatrists at the Health Center, emphasize that Antabuse is just one form of treatment of alcoholism and is ineffective without concurrent counseling.

"It's just one deterrent, one way of making people stop and remember that alcohol is bad for them," said Miller. "It's not necessarily the best treatment or the most effective. Obviously if it was, it would be the only answer.

During the past year between seven and eight Poly students have been given Antabuse as a result of counseling with Looney and Miller. This is 10 to 15 per cent of all Poly drinkers. "The only way it can be effective is if the person is willing to work with him on his other problems, the ones causing the alcoholism," said Miller.

According to the American Medical Association, Antabuse used alone and without supportive therapy, is not a cure for alcoholism and is unlikely to have more than a temporary effect on the drinking pattern of the chronic alcoholic.

Montrose

Montrose described special consideration outside of the normal classroom. His back ground credits for surpassing those of any typical rock n' roll combination.

"Things began for Montrose when in 1968 at the age of 16 he was discovered by a group of local musicians. A recording contract followed and soon thereafter a tour. Montrose has been on tour since then and has performed throughout the United States, Canada, Europe, and Japan. He has released three albums and has performed in over 300 concerts worldwide.

"The most successful tour was the one in 1980 when the group performed in over 50 concerts in Europe. The tour was highly successful and the group received critical acclaim for their live performances.

"In the early 1970's, Montrose decided to pursue a career in music and formed his own band, Montrose. The group released its first album in 1973 and has since released several more albums. Montrose has also performed as a solo artist and has released several solo albums.

"Montrose's sound is characterized by powerful vocals and hard-driving rock music. The group's songs often deal with themes of love, passion, and intensity.

Antabuse: A Drug For Drinkers

Discovered in 1947, Antabuse was approved by the Food and Drug Administration in 1951. In that year five deaths were reported from improper dosage.

Since that time the American Medical Association's Committee on Alcoholism has declared that properly prescribed, the drug is effective with few side effects.

"Antabuse can kill if it is combined with the drinking of excessive amounts of alcohol," stated Health Center pharmacist Darrell Bennett. "It never happens though because the reaction is so nauseating, so sickening, people can't help or stop drinking."

Bennett warns that any source of alcohol, not just beer, can be used in an Antabuse program. Reactions can occur with the use of Nyquil, Geritol, tonics, cough syrup, after shave lotions and mouthwashes — all containing alcohol.

Antabuse must be taken on a daily basis to be effective. Those who have not been administered until the alcoholic has gone through a three or five day dry up period. According to Bennett there is no danger of withdrawal or addiction.

"As long as the drug is not abused, as long as alcohol is abstained from, Antabuse is a safe drug," stated Bennett.

Alcoholics participating in an Antabuse program experience a high rate of failure. "The drug works," said Bennett. "But its success is dependent upon the personality of the person taking it."

"A lot of people just decide they like the bottle better."

To encourage the regular taking of the drug and to follow a patient's progress Bennett will administer the drug daily if an alcoholic requests it.

"That's all we can do," said Bennett. "It's completely voluntary and you just can't force a person to take it."

Physically safe, Antabuse improperly prescribed can increase an alcoholic's psychological problems. "I have no idea of what a student lays, he's going to feel disgusted at himself and lose some self-esteem that he can't trust himself to say no," said Looney.

During the past year between seven and eight Poly students have been given Antabuse as a result of counseling with Looney and Miller. This is 10 to 15 per cent of all Poly drinkers. "The only way it can be effective is if the person is willing to work with him on his other problems, the ones causing the alcoholism," said Miller.

According to the American Medical Association, Antabuse used alone and without supportive therapy, is not a cure for alcoholism and is unlikely to have more than a temporary effect on the drinking pattern of the chronic alcoholic.

"The more you drink the more violently ill you become and the longer it takes to get rid of the reaction," said Bennett. "In most cases we can treat for nausea and send them home but it can turn into a real medical emergency."

Antabuse is not used at the county Alcohol Withdrawal and Recovery Center. Mike Franklin, residential director of the detoxification center, explained saying, "It's a maintenance drug with a long term recovery period.

"It's not really a medication, it's a deterrent."

Because of this Franklin does not see Antabuse as being applicable to the work the center which he describes as "a drying up and referral agency."

"We use so many therapies as possible to get a student to answer the questions of where he is, what he wants and what's best for him," said Looney. "Antabuse is just one possible way to go about it."

SLO Goes Snow

Parched blades of grass were only a few weeks ago swilling under one of the driest droughts in recent history, Tuesday, but the second time in about two weeks, these same blades of grass were subjected to the opposite extreme — snow.

A cold- front moved into the area on New Year's Eve, dropping several inches of snow, but it also brought down an unprecedented amount of snow on San Luis Obispo County.

The snowfall forced the closure of Caruso Grade to through traffic for several hours during Tuesday night. The snowing hours saw the white flaked collected on the hillsides and roadbeds of Caruso Grade (see Thomas Keiley's photo on right.)

An unidentified snowperson allegedly built by Associated Students, Inc., officers saw wandering around the University Union.

Snow blanketed most of the higher hills and mountains in the county. The coastal range from San Simeon to the South County had several inches of powdery according to some residents. The white crust was visible to all students coming to the Federal Wednesday morning.

The snowfall saw as much traffic as usual. During the night, the California Highway Patrol reported eight accidents. There were also uncounted cars who lost control on the icy roads spinning haphazardly off the pavement.

Even the Goodyear blimp was forced to interrupt a trip to San Francisco and land at San Luis Obispo Airport because of the bad weather.

A Split Over PG&E Nuclear Ads

By ANNE ZEKRIEN
Daily Staff Writer

The question of sabotage at nuclear power plants is strongly contested by both PPUc and local proponents of the nuclear initiative.

PG&E spokesman Dick Davin disagrees: "There is nothing political about this. I feel the ad is promoting nuclear power, and unless PG&E has taken a consensus approach to the issue, we shouldn't use ratepayers' money for that purpose," Fleming says. The ads are telling people nuclear power is clean, cheap and dependable," says Fleming. "We feel there are facts to substantiate the falsity of all those claims. As a ratepayer I do not approve of any of my money going to any nuclear power in any way."

Fleming also feels the picture of the hand holding a uranium pellet gives a misleading impression about the safety of handling nuclear materials. "You wouldn't be able to hold spent fuel in your hand because the radioactive isotopes released by fission are too dangerous. Plutonium in oxide form, if inhaled, will cause death or lung cancer," says Fleming. Apflberg, another member of Mothers For Peace, feels the advertisement is misleading because it doesn't mention what nuclear opponents claim as risks associated with the operation of nuclear power plants.

Apflberg cites routine radioactive emissions, earthquake dangers, accidents caused by human error, the possibility of sabotage, and waste storage problems as areas of concern that are not mentioned in the advertisement. "There is always a danger of sabotage in this society," Davin says. "There is no whole lot of saboteurs can do," says Davin. Davin says the waste products are shipped to the reprocessing plants in cans weighing 150 tons, which are

Judge Rejects Defense Motion

LOS ANGELES (UPI) - A Superior Court judge at a hearing Wednesday rejected a defense motion to rule inadmissible certain evidence seized by the FBI at Patricia Hearst's San Francisco residence.

Judge Mark Brandtler said FBI agents were armed with an arrest warrant which enabled them legally to search the residence where the newspaper heiress was arrested last September after 18 months as a fugitive with the Symbionese Liberation Army.

Brandtler's ruling differed directly with one he made Monday barring introduction of evidence seized at the residence occupied by the Harriets when they were arrested the same day as Miss Hearst but in a different location.

The Harriets were taken into custody outside their residence and FBI agents made an immediate search of the place although they did not get a search warrant until a day later. Brandtler pointed out the FBI had the Harris residence under surveillance for more than a day and had ample time in which to get a search warrant in advance.

An Ironic Situation

by JON HASTINGS

Daily Sports Editor

Two centuries ago when it all began in a small New England town, the heroes of this country wore long hair and talked about the fight for freedom and rights. Today, a little less than two hundred years later, values have changed and so have the heroes.

Heroes still have long hair and fight for freedom, but they do it with owners, not countries. Instead of trying to defeat the Red Coats, they are trying to figure out how to beat the Red Sox.

It no longer matters how many Indians a hero kills, it's how many he strikes out. Today a Patriot is someone who loses more than he wins on Sunday afternoons.

The hero of modern times, however, is the professional athlete. No names are as familiar to the American people as those of sports figures. Today Washington is not someone who held out at Valley Forge, he is someone who holds on in San Francisco or Minnesota.

The past gave us Abraham Lincoln and Daniel Boone to admire. Today we are looking up to Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Bill Walton, literally.

In this bicentennial year, nothing garners more attention than sports. While in the eighteenth century people were concerned about emancipating the slaves, today all they want to do is fire Bobby Orr from the penalty box.

In the two hundred years of this country's existence, sports have come along way. Professional sport is great. It provides a lot of opportunities and enjoyment for a lot of people, but sometimes people think too much of its participants and forget about the people who are donating more than a jump shot to this society.

OJ Simpson is fun to watch, but as far as lasting contributions to the world goes, he isn't making many more than your neighborhood bus driver. But there are people making phenomenal contributions in the field of medicine that are standing in line to pay ten dollars to see Simpson play.

The irony is absurd. It is fine to look up to pro athletes, but it would be rather tragic if the only thing future generations could remember about the 1970's was that Joe Namath had a quick release and Lynn Swann had good hands.
