Professors object to proposed 5% pay raise

By SCOTT GRAVEN
Daily Rider

The proposed pay raise for professors is a controversial issue on campus.

The proposed pay raise doesn't even keep up with inflation, according to some professors.

As a result, some professors are planning to vote against the increase.

Inflation has eroded the value of the proposed pay raise.

Learning the hard way

This article was originally to be called, "Learning the hard way," but after thinking it over I decided that "Learning the hard way" was a little too hard for me. I mean, I wanted a title that would catch the reader's eye and make them want to read on, but I also didn't want to scare them away with too much information. I finally settled on "Learning the hard way" because it's short, sweet, and to the point. It's also a little bit of a pun, which I think is always a good thing when it comes to titles.

The main point of this article is to talk about the struggles of a person who is going through a difficult situation. I think it's important to acknowledge that we all have our struggles and that it's okay to talk about them. By sharing our experiences, we can help others feel less alone and more supported.

The first part of the article describes a person who is going through a difficult situation. They are feeling overwhelmed and unsure of what to do. The author's advice is to take a deep breath and try to stay calm. This is a good piece of advice, but I think it's important to also acknowledge that sometimes it's okay to feel overwhelmed and unsure of what to do.

The second part of the article talks about the importance of self-care. The author's advice is to make time for yourself and to do things that make you happy. This is a great piece of advice, but I think it's important to also acknowledge that sometimes it's okay to not feel happy and that it's okay to feel sad or angry.

In conclusion, I think this article is a great example of how to write about difficult situations in a way that is both informative and reader-friendly. It's also a great example of how to balance the need to be informative with the need to be engaging. Overall, I think this article is a great read and I hope it helps others who are going through similar situations.

Cold feet; a chilling bedroom crisis

Every morning while waking up, I have this strange sensation. My feet feel as if they are on fire, and I can't move them without crying out in pain. I feel like my legs are on fire, and I can't bear the thought of them touching the floor.

The sensation is so intense that I have to stand for several minutes before I can finally walk. I have tried everything from ice packs to hot showers, but nothing seems to help. I even tried acupuncture, but the needles burned like hot coals.

I have heard that sleeping on a bed made of ice might help, but I don't think I could stand it. I have also heard that wearing wool socks might help, but I don't think I could stand it. I have also heard that wearing wool socks might help, but I don't think I could stand it.

I am not the only one with this problem. My friends and family have all experienced similar sensations, but no one has been able to find a solution. Some have tried sleeping on ice, but it was too cold. Some have tried sleeping on fire, but it was too hot.

The only thing I can do is to stand there and feel the coldness consume me. It's a terrible feeling, and I can't imagine anyone wanting to live with it.

A final message for the president

A Minnesota caged was placed in the White House last week. Some argument and discussion ensued. The White House was not pleased with the caged, and some members of the Cabinet were not too pleased with the argument.

"Hold on," said the president. "We have an argument here."

I wanted to point out that the White House is the property of the President of the United States. I think that it's important to respect the President's property and to be mindful of the impact our actions have on it.

In conclusion, I think that it's important to be respectful of the President's property and to be mindful of the impact our actions have on it. It's also important to be respectful of each other and to work together to find solutions to our problems.

Editor:

Editorially, I was involved in an unproductive executive conference with some transportation registration students. It was a long, boring, and unproductive meeting. A student complained, suggesting that perhaps we should review the registration process with the students. Some others could not disagree and agreed with the student's complaint. They expressed their dissatisfaction with the process and suggested improvements.

I really feel it is quite unnecessary to be so direct. However, the meeting was held in the White House. One of the registrars thought it was necessary to stop complaining, but I am not sure why or what system I am not sure. I do believe that we should review the registration process and try to be more efficient.

In conclusion, we should review the registration process and try to be more efficient. I think that it's important to be respectful of the President's property and to be mindful of the impact our actions have on it. It's also important to be respectful of each other and to work together to find solutions to our problems.

Saudi offer to ‘buy’ Palestine

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—King Khalid and Crown Prince Fahd of oil-rich Saudi Arabia have offered to buy the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip from Israel to establish a Palestinian state, an Arab source said Tuesday.

The Saudi leaders made the offer to President Carter during his visit earlier this month to Saudi Arabia, the world’s leading oil exporter, according to the source in London, a usually well-informed daily digest of Arab affairs.

“The Saudis made it plain to the American president they were prepared to pay as much as $12 billion to establish a homeland for the Palestinian nation, even if that means buying the West Bank and Gaza from Israel,” the publication said.

It quoted Khalid and Fahd as telling Carter: “You try to solve the Palestinian problem and we are ready to give you all the aid you want.”

It is believed that Saudi House press secretary Jody Powell, who attended some of the meetings between U.S. and Saudi officials, said he was unaware of any such offer.

“Instead neither King Khalid nor Prince Fahd made such a statement,” Powell said.

Scandal probe clears officials

SEOUL, South Korea (AP)—Acting Deputy U.S. Attorney General Benjamin R. Civin, urged South Koreans Sunday that the removal of a Temple Park in the provincial town of Gyeongju was 100 percent clear of any involvement of present U.S. officials or members of Congress.

Civin, chief U.S. inspector of Paris for four days, told reporters that Justice Secretary Yoon Pyun, who asked to see the minutes of the hearing of the committee, but the government said he was not present.

The government said it would apply “primarily if not exclusively” to former officials and private individuals.

The Justice Department official said, however, that the testimony has been “extremely useful.”

Asked if he meant it extended to incidents against current congressmen, Civin replied, “I didn’t say that, but that would be a reasonable inference from what I did say.”

Hayakawa explains absences

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—Sen. S.I. Hayakawa defended Howard today against a Congressional Quarterly report that he had the highest-eve attendance record in the Senate, but he admitted, “It isn’t terrible.”

The 50-year-old California junior senator, who was asked about the report during a news conference in his today trip to Japan, said, “I did do better than eight out of 10 times when I came up. The average is over 96 percent.”

The figures, he declared, “do not tell the whole story because senators have so many other duties than voting, especially duties in behalf of his constituents.”

The Congressional Quarterly, said last week that the average for the 106 senators in the first session of the 96th Congress was 96 percent and that Hayakawa’s record was 91 percent.

Evel Knievel labeled coward

SANTA MONICA (AP)—Berating Evel Knievel as a man guilty of “extreme cowardice,” an angry judge ordered the stunt man Tuesday to spend his entire six-month jail sentence in solitary confinement with no chance of early parole.

“Your condition that has brought you here is about as low as you could get,” Judge Edward Ralston told Knievel, who had pleaded minutes before to be returned to a Washington hospital.

But the 50-year-old, declaring he was tired of reading about Knievel’s “coward business—while a prisoner,” said he had treated to Knievel’s “career.”

Among those to attend the hearing were Knievel’s lawyer, John H. Knowles, and Knievel’s wife, Dorothy.

Housing officer says students can relax

By RICHARD PRICE

Daily Star Writer

a. Lambert, a Housing Officer at Cal Poly, explained that the ordinance will be enforced with discretion. He said that while the city will act on complaints, even if it is not to the extreme stage where too many people are living in one place, the city will still address concerns, especially if the residents are causing problems for themselves or their neighbors.

"It's not too bad of a situation," Lambert said. "We have received complaints about overcrowding, noise, and other issues. We will take action if the situation becomes a problem.

Students rank in rodeo

Cal Poly's rodeo teams have topped the pack in the last competition. The team's success is due to the hard work and dedication of both the riders and the horses they work with.

"We've been working on this for a long time," said team manager Dan Dementighini. "We've been practicing all year and we're proud of our riders."

Graduate fellowships due

The deadline for applying for graduate fellowships is quickly approaching. Students are encouraged to submit their applications soon.

"The fellowships are available to students pursuing a graduate degree," said fellowship advisor Jane Brown. "Students must have a minimum GPA and be enrolled in a graduate program to qualify."
SPORTS

A Sporting view

Playing in the pits

Crandall Gym is a pit.

During Monday’s devotions, Crandall Gym was packed to the brim, as students and faculty turned their backs on the world’s problems through the service. The gym, which has also served as a hostel for guests of the university, is a place where the students can come together and bond. It is a place where the students can come together and bond.

But this IX season has been a bit different. It clearly started with equal opportunity and it ended with equal opportunity.

This year’s IX season was marked by a loss of interest in all sports of the university. Sports is one of the major concerns of the student body. This is clearly a sad moment in history.

The exciting thing in the fall is that there are shadows under the leaves while the white is in the ground. This can clearly be seen.

LA State cuts football program

By JANET

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

Daily Paper editorial staff members have quoted Zane, Frank, Joe, and Pasquale (P) to have been key players in the football program.

Colin Shan's content regarding the program's impact on the team and its potential future involvement was notably absent from the page.

"It really wasn't worth it," Zane said. "We didn't have enough players."

Frank chimed in, "Yeah, we played hard, but we didn't have enough talent."

Joe and Pasquale (P) echoed the sentiment, stating that the program was not sustainable without significant improvements. They both expressed a desire to focus on other areas of the athletic program.

"We need to reevaluate our priorities," Joe said. "Football isn't feasible with our current resources."

Pasquale (P) added, "We have to consider the impact on our other teams."

The Future of the Program

"It's not clear what the future holds," Zane concluded. "We'll see what happens next semester."
