Poly volleys for state title

By JIM ALVIERMAN
Mustang Daily Writer

The Cal Poly volleyball team knew it needed to win in the finals of the Southern California Collegiate Invitational Championship to clinch a berth in the NCAA regional. And so they did.

A 15-4, 15-2, 15-8 victory over Cal State Northridge before a vocal crowd of student fans gave the Mustangs their second consecutive regional tournament as a state title.

Coach Mike Wilson's squad had reached the finals before losing at the final match against the Mustangs, and a win was needed to keep Cal Poly's hopes for a spot in the NCAA Division I Western Regional Tourney alive.

The Mustangs, who had the number one seed in the division tournament, defeated Northridge in four sets, 15-7, 15-7, 15-7.

The win doesn't automatically quality Wilson for the Division I Western Regional but it does get the Mustangs a berth in the NCAA Regional. A win over Northridge would put Wilson in the NCAA Regional.

Wilson's men for the Division I Western Regional but it doesn't mean the Mustangs are certain to win. The Mustangs will face San Diego State University in the first round and then face either UCLA or the University of Arizona in the quarterfinals.

The playoffs for the Mustangs seem to be a good match as the Anteaters and Mustangs have split a pair of matches this season, both games decided in four sets.

The Mustangs reached the finals with an upset win over the University of Santa Clara March 10-11. The Mustangs defeated Santa Clara, 15-3, 15-9 for their place in the regional.

Chanting marchers protest housing law

By TONY TRANT
Mustang Daily Writer

Tony Trant, the social relations reporter for the Mustang Daily, wrote about the protest march for housing laws. The march was held on March 15, and was organized by the Housing Action Club and the Political Science Department.

The march was organized in response to the housing crisis in San Luis Obispo County. The marchers called for more affordable housing options and for the government to take action to address the housing crisis.

The march was led by the Housing Action Club, which has been advocating for affordable housing for several years. The Club is made up of students who are concerned about the housing crisis in the area.

The marchers were joined by members of the Political Science Department, who also support the need for more affordable housing. The Department has been studying the housing crisis and has conducted research on the issue.

The march was a peaceful protest, with the marchers holding signs and chanting slogans. The marchers were joined by several hundred people, who all marched together in solidarity.

The march was a success, with many people coming together to call for action on the housing crisis. The marchers hope that their efforts will lead to change and that the government will take action to address the housing crisis.

Other members of the rally included members of the San Luis Obispo County Fair Housing Council, the San Luis Obispo County Fair Housing Council, and the City Council.

The rally ended with a demonstration in front of the City Hall, where the marchers chanted and held signs calling for action on the housing crisis. The demonstration lasted for several hours, and ended with the marchers marching back to the start point.

Politics spur new look at elections

As ASI elections come around again, with rumors and propaganda, I repeatedly hear that we need an open forum of ideas and an honest debate. But I've found this to be a distant dream of the Student Affairs Council.

The meeting, upon first viewing, looked like a typical ASI meeting. Everybody was talking, and it seemed like the meeting was going to end without any decision. However, after about an hour of discussion, the ASI Vice-President Larry Baker and I had a chat and decided to leave things the way they were.

I asked several people to write to me about their ideas for the future, and I'm happy to report that I received several responses. From these responses, I've learned that many students are concerned about the future of the university and are looking for a new approach to the elections.

One student, John Smith, suggested that we could use the internet to conduct the elections, which would save time and money. Another student, Jane Doe, suggested that we could use a different method of voting, such as a secret ballot, which would ensure that every student's vote is counted.

I'm excited to see what ideas will come out of this meeting, and I hope that we can use these ideas to make the ASI elections more fair and open.

Homecoming events face cancellations

"The students involved in putting on the minority are putting in four to five years, but they still finance all the events for the rest of their years. We had more than enough money to pull it off until the April 21, 1972 Homecoming." Meanwhile, the financial committee has been working on the budget, which includes the Homecoming at Cal Poly. However, at the last Senate meeting the majority of the committee was brought to a halt because of the budget issue. The Finance Committee will still need Senate approval for the cuts to become final.
