The miserable weather throughout the county this week is enough to make even Gene Kelly quit singing, get off his lamp post and go inside.

Rain that fell during finals week, making a trying week even worse, is back again for at least the start of Spring Quarter. National Weather Service forecasters said the rain will continue today—less frequently than Wednesday’s showers but temperatures will be much cooler.

Rains Wednesday night dropped into the upper 30s and may drop even lower tonight, forecasters reported.

Winds that blew the rain around early Wednesday—as fast as 40 mph—should die down early today.

On campus, the rain is only rain—a university police dispatcher reported no damage caused by the showers.

About the only thing the rain has done is make the job of lifting the Erhart Agriculture Bridge look like a game of mud football. It has stopped the rodeo team from practicing, as Cal Poly Arena now looks like Noah might have crossed.

The election’s negative effect on the U.S. stems from the close tie this country has with the moderate Christian Democrat Party—ties the right wing groups will resist.

Gooden said if the right wing groups form a coalition, the U.S. may have to begin to re-establish ties with the government in El Salvador and urge them to start the reforms again. He said this could be done by “putting on some pressure behind the scenes.”

Praise of the elections in El Salvador may be based on insufficient evidence, according to political science instructor Reginald Gooden.

American leaders have heralded the election as a defeat of the terrorist forces in El Salvador without really examining the entire scope of the election, said Gooden.

According to Gooden, the results of the election last weekend will take a considerable amount of studying before the truth about the election can be accurately determined.

Gooden said the American press showed the election in a more positive way to achieve peace in El Salvador, according to Gooden.

The main bond of the right wing parties, such as Arena and the Popular Military Party, is a mutual distrust of agrarian reform.

However, agrarian reform is the only way to achieve peace in El Salvador, according to Gooden.

The election in El Salvador was urged to send in troops. Gooden said this would be hard for the government to accomplish, but the precedent is there.

Police bust philosophy pros inelimination protest

By Shuler Turner

University police arrested three philosophy professors who chained themselves to their office doors to protest the elimination of their department.

The incident brings to 13 the number of faculty members arrested on charges of resisting arrest since Chancellor Glenn E. Blong of the California State University System called for extensive cuts in education because of a state budget crisis.

A highly-placed source in Cal Poly administration said the decision was made over Spring break to eliminate several academic departments on campus.

Administrators formed the Academic Overview Committee, which was supposed to select those departments to be cut.

The council's decision, the source said, was to drop the so-called minor departments—those that the council has considered unimportant to the students' education and a waste of resources that could be used more wisely.

Besides philosophy, the minor departments include applied art and design, child development, dietetics and food administration, education, English, history, home economics, liberal studies, recreation administration, speech communication and journalism.

This may be the last April Fool's Day edition of the Mustang Daily this year.

The announcement of department cuts prompted only student protests from professors and students in those departments. Small groups of demonstrators stormed the administration building early Tuesday and wrote Latin phrases on the windows in whipped cream and smeared walls with seaweed onion.

Police called in Cal Poly National Guard troops dressed in full combat gear, to control the demonstrators, but the students and faculty offered no resistance.

Police officials speculate that Tuesday's demonstrators came from the philosophy and economics departments, but reports on further damage.

Three professors from several departments chained themselves to office doors Tuesday night, refusing food and resisting arrest.

When police carried the three philosophy professors away Wednesday, the protesters repeatedly chanted, "Philosophy the guide of life," the Phi Beta Kappa society motto.

Students and faculty members have already formed a coalition, Keep Us Teaching and Studying and the council for administration, speech communication and journalism.

President cancels Poly Royal after OH dope scandal

BY SHARON REEPER

President Warrin Beshar announced yesterday that Poly Royal will be cancelled due to "unsustainable practices" by the Ornamental Horticulture Department.

Beshar said through a special task force team, a newly cultivated marijuana crop with a street value of over $60 million was discovered growing on OH Department grounds the last day of Winter Quarters. L foreach in the experimental greenhouses between the teaching labs and the rhododendrons, 11-foot tall Cannabis plants were found thriving under the care of OH 343 (Pot Plant Production) students.

Beshar said that though the OH 343 class grew the marijuana, it was not under the direction of any Cal Poly professor.

"It was purely a student-run ganja-growing," said Beshar. "And all of Cal Poly shall advise for this mistake. We will simply wipe Poly Royal off the April calendar."

The special task force team was set up by the Beshar administration after a paid tip-off was given to the president by a crop science major whose key to the locked 'pot' greenhouse was taken away by members of the OH 343 class. The class members "never trusted me after one of the plants died under my care," said the crops science major who refused to be identified. In retaliation, the ousted pot grower went to the president.

The task force team was made up of Cal Poly police pretending to be agriculture majors dressed in overall and covered in cow mucus while carrying pitchforks. Three OH 343 students were held inside the marijuana-filled greenhouses at the point of the pitchforks until everybody involved in the project had been identified and arrested. No names of the arrested have been released and no reasons were given for the illegal growing project.

Mortal owners with rooms filled to capacity and restaurant owners expecting massive crowds for the April 23 weekend are angry at the president's decision to cancel Poly Royal.

"I just don't know what this will do to our budget," said Mildred Milligan, owner of the 'Lights Out' motel on Monterey Street. "We have even Poly Royal posters hanging in all the rooms commemorating the 50th year and I bought a new banner for the hotel."

The Cigarette Factory restaurant owner, "Tip" Tipterio, plans to use Cal Poly for the lease of business over the usually big money-maker weekend.

"I don't know what that author (Beshar) is pulling, but his decision is hurting a lot of businesses. I'm damned if I'm going to be short-changed on some good business," said the irrepressible restaurant owner. "I'm going to sue Cal Poly.

"It's a total bummer man," said sixth year recreation major Rob "Rasta" Smith. "I mean, it's not like they (OH department) were growing rag weed or nothing."

Besides, what other time could we have four straight days of partying during school?"

Beshar said he wants the marijuana incident "kept at a minimum amount of publicity" so that Cal Poly's name won't be damaged due to the illegal activity.

"There will be no Poly Royal in 1982, so just tell your parents not to come," said Beshar. "It will just be school as usual."

Governor unveils vicious CSU budget slashes

BY TWIRPY THOMAS

Copy Date

New budget cuts for the California State University system were unveiled Monday by Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., as he vowed to "tuck the college ghoul for every penny they've got."

Brown's new budget-slaughtering measures take effect Fall, 1983 and are an effort to "rescue the glorious State of California from the financial morass in which it is currently muddled," said Brown. The systemswide cuts amount to 25 percent of the CSU's budget, or $750 million.

"These cuts are atrocious," said Cal Poly President Warren Beeker. "Now we are going to have to give up our plans for the new faculty swimming pool, bar and Pac-Man arcade on top of the Administration building. What does Brown want to do? Rip education in the bud?"

The CSU Board of Trustees went into closed session Monday night to decide where and how one-fourth of the budget would be cut.

An unidentified source reported that the Board discussed many emergency measures to mitigate the devastating cuts, including raising student fees to $750 a year, combining the Humboldt, Bakersfield, and San Diego campuses, laying off employees and closing the facility down forever.

However, CSU Chancellor Glenn S. Dimples decided it was "too much of an Anacan headache" for the Board to work with the budget, so each university president was given the power to trim their own budget, as long as "the students get stuck in the end" said Dimples.

Beeker met with top administrators Wednesday and managed to deal with Cal Poly's budget problems in the following ways:

− Saving $8 million a year by firing all Dining Hall employees and closing the facility down forever. Beeker said it was more "cost-effective" for McDonald's, its Coke, and Spike's to open meal ticket franchise on campus.
− We'd damage a consumer analysis on the Dining Hall and found out that four out of five meals there would wound up at the city dump," reported Beeker.
− Instituting "surcharges" on usage of popular student areas such as the University Union, the library, El Corral Bookstore, and all of the campus restrooms.
− According to Beeker, a surcharge fee of $1 will be billed to every student per week to use these popular facilities. Armed guards will be on duty to ensure that the students either pay before they enter or sign a pro­ nominal note in blood.
− "We can make big bucks with the surcharge," figure Beeker, who estimated the restroom income alone could generate $1.4 million.
− Laying off every faculty member hired after 1950. Beeker admits that "class sizes will be considerably larger" and the teachers will have bigger loads, but said it: "won't be a problem.
− Plans are already underway to hold physics classes in Mustang Stadium and American literature courses on the soccer runway.

"By laying off all the young whippersnapper faculty, we can save about $10 million," gushed Cal Poly budget official Rock Barstow.

− Starting a mandatory "paycheck sharing" program whereby students must hand over their first year's wages to Cal Poly after graduation in order to receive their diploma.

− This action will really make Cal Poly rich," said Beeker. "Especially when we get the paychecks of the welding and engineering majors."

− Opening a "Bribery Office" on campus that is expected to generate an astounding $60 million per year. The office will handle such student requests as adding a class everybody else wants, dropping a class after week seven, taking care of the stack of parking tickets one has, or obtaining front-row tickets at concerts.

"The Bribery Office will soon become an essential part of our ongoing quest to save Cal Poly from financial disaster," said Beeker.

Each bribe will cost $800. In addition to these immediately planned measures, Beeker and administration officials are looking into the possibility of selling Poly Canyon, the Swine Unit and the "P" on the hill to some interested oil-rich buyers.

Punks banned from concerts

BY

TOM-BOT JOHNSON

Fear that certain "punk elements" still lurk about the university spurred the ASI Concerts Committee to pass a series of stricter rules to govern concerts at Cal Poly. The committee President announced Wednesday that Greg Wallflower explained that the new list of regulations were necessary because the rules enacted in the wake of the February Pretenders concert did not go far enough to ensure that "wanton acts of violence and destruction" would be curbed during concerts.

Wallflower said that most of the new rules are designed to get at the cause of violence by barring troublemakers from concerts at Cal Poly.

"We don't want those vicious barbarians to invade our nice, quiet campus. We are trying to keep out those psychopaths who clap and whistle loudly, stand on their chairs and dance wildly in the aisles," said Wallflower.

To eliminate the "psychopaths," Wallflower said the committee will investigate the history of those who want boy concerts tickets to determine if the buyers have a pattern of violent behavior. Individuals who have a police record, were punished during grade school for fighting, have seen the movie Rebel Without A Cause or have ever heard the band Devo, will not be admitted into the concerts.

Wallflower conceded that a spot check of the concert goers' psychol­ogy will not eliminate "all punk and other dangerous elements" at musical events. Excessive drinking and using dangerous drugs such as marijuana can turn the most mild­ mannered person into an all­American thug. Wallflower said. Therefore new pro­cedures have been in­stituted to weed out drunks and drug users.

"Everyone who comes into the Main Gym (to see a concert) must first submit to a strip search to ensure that they have no booms or drugs on them. Patrons then will be given a breath analyzer test and will give their urine sample to check for evidence of alcohol and il­licit drugs," Wallflower said.

As an additional precaution, the committee also outlined requirements for groups who want to be allowed to play at Cal Poly. The Concerts Committee will not consider any group which doesn't have at least 15 years old, has male and female musicians with hair over their ears or has a bass guitar.

"We want to bring musicians who fit the general mold of the majority of Cal Poly students and do not upset the quiet, conserv­ative atmosphere here at Poly. We outlawed brass, drums, and other instruments which show that their throbbing volume would lead to mobs to dance, yell and commit other insanities," said Wallflower.

Wallflower also presented a list of performers the Concerts Com­mittee is recruiting. The list includes Andy Williams, Perry Como, Tony Bennett and Jim Nabors. The committee also considered Barry Manilow, but pulled out of the bidding after it did a comprehensive study of the sickly, middle-aged pop-rock singer.

"We were aghast to find that he has hair which almost touches his collar. Everyone had told us what an upright individual he was, but we found him to be nothing more than a flabby hobo," Wallflower said. The Concerts Committee was pleased that some of Manilow's up­beat songs would rouse the crowd to violence. "We feared that some of Mr. Manilow's songs, especially "Copacabana," would send the crowd into a frenzy they would destroy their chairs and make a mess. If Manilow played, we could probably have a riot on our hands," Wallflower said.

In cooperation with the Concerts Committee, the Public Safety Department announced the committee had formed a special SWAT team to try and "eliminate elements" on campus.

"Our intent is to eliminate all punk rockers and other subversive types on campus," said Officer Thug, head of the Public Safety Department.

"We have sent our troops on a search and destroy mission. They have been instructed to search out the enemy, infiltrate its camp and to termi­nate theseSaboteurs with extreme prejudice." These troops will include Wallflower warned that if the members of the fes­tive mob continue to yell and clap loudly, and if they at­tempt to stand on their chairs, then more drastic steps may have to be taken.

"If these new rules fail to pacify the mob, we will consider banning musical concerts and records instead."
Mustang netters set for more games, more rain

After three weeks without a match, both Mustang tennis teams are itching for competition. Now if the weather would just cooperate, things would be fine.

The men's tennis team, perched this week at the top of the California Collegiate Athletic Association standings, watched helplessly as its scheduled match against Fresno State slid into the "Canoodled" slot Wednesday afternoon due to the rain. Today's battle with UC San Diego has also been cancelled.

The rain week hasn't been very kind to the women's team, either. The Mustangs, who haven't had a match since March 10, have held their workouts in the main gym this week. With a 6-0 mark in CCCAA play, the men's squad is in the midst of a three-way tie for the league lead with UC Riverside and Cal State Bakersfield. That will change in a hurry as the Mustangs host the Highlanders Friday at 3 p.m.

With only two more CCCAA games remaining, with Riverside and Bakersfield, the Mustangs have an inside track at making the Division II tournament in May. Other than the fact that the Mustangs host both teams in the next two weeks, head coach Hugh Bream thinks his team can slip past the Highlanders.

The Mustangs, 7-4 overall and undefeated against Div. II teams, will travel to San Francisco State Saturday at 2:30, weather permitting.

The women's team will journey down to Cal State Northridge and Cal Poly Pomona this weekend in hopes of improving its 5-4 CCCAA record. The Matadors are leading the conference by a game over Bakersfield, while the Broncs, the 1981 loop titans, are mired near the bottom of the league standings. Even though the Mustangs haven't seen another uniform color across the note in some time, head coach Orion Yeast, in true coach's form, is taking the good with the bad.

"The layoff hurt us, but we're in good conditions," said Yeast.

Corporate murder

Nearby every day the headlines tell about the crisis in El Salvador and Reagan’s budget slashes. Meanwhile, some large corporations, temporarily out of the limelight, have been getting away with murder. Literally.

The declining birth rates of developed countries have left baby formula companies with a loss of profits to contend with. Rather than develop new products to expand its market in the United States, The Nestle Co. chose to create markets through propaganda in the Third World—at the expense of health and even lives of countless children. Recently, however, Nestle has agreed to “unilaterally implement all aspects of the World Health Organization code,” according to Carolyn Campion. Campion said this agreement would apply to advertising, labeling, free samples—basically all of the insidious practices deployed by church groups and international health organizations for years.

However, Campion was quick to add a clarification to Nestle’s announcement.

“We will do what our competition does (in regard to advertising, etc. of infant formula), but in those countries which wish us to do otherwise, we will do so,” she said.

In other words, Nestle isn’t giving up anything. Infant formula sales will remain high in Third World countries, and, in countries where Nestle has managed to gain support within the government, nothing will change.

On the surface, the practices of selling baby formula appear to be an act of compassion rather than of injustice. Bottle-feeding infants could benefit mothers of underdeveloped countries by giving them more time to work—unhampered by the “burden” of nursing their children.

The mothers, however, being illiterate in most cases, don’t realize they are pawns in a corporate strategy to rob them of the future health and even the lives of countless children. Instead, they are led to believe that Nestle’s “unilateral” agreement will somehow provide them with milk substitutes, free samples, or other such promises. In reality, the Nestle Co. is trying to get the mothers to believe that they are taking care of their children by drinking expensive formulas.

As a result of this high-cost, many mothers drastically dilute the formula, making a day’s supply last a week. This creates a serious health hazard for the child. Without clean water to mix the formula, a refrigerator to store prepared formula, or the knowledge that boiling water is needed to sterilize the bottle and nipple to prevent bacterial contamination, conditions for proper use of infant formulas are poor at best.

Countless mothers, with the helping hand of Nestle have been killing their children. They don’t realize their way of using the formula is unsafe, and Nestle was in no hurry to tell them. Parents find out something is wrong soon enough, when their babies begin suffering from fevers and diarrheas and eventually die from malnutrition.

The multinational conglomerate has, in the past, consistently and effectively resisted all appeals to stop promoting baby formula to mothers who can’t safely use it. The World Health Organization has repeatedly opposed Nestle’s aggressive promotion of infant formula in Third World countries with the code, which is supported by 186 countries. The powerful, immensely wealthy United States and several other developed countries, however, kept the code from passing.

An international boycott was launched several years ago against Nestle in an attempt to pressure the corporation to stop pushing plastic bottles into the months of Third World babies. The Mustang Daily Editorial Board supported this boycott in a previous editorial. We urge our readers to avoid buying Nestle products, which include Libby’s, Swiss Knight Cheese, Berringer Bros. and Los Hermanos wines, and Lancome and L’oreal cosmetics.

The Mustang Daily Editorial board commends The Nestle Company for its decision to comply with the WHO, but we have grave doubts about its sincerity. With such a horrendous track record, it is quite likely the Nestle agreement was due to a combination of public pressure and the ever-present corruption—money.

Editor:

“Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex. The Congress shall have the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article. This amendment shall take effect two years after the date of ratification.”

Please take note. Miss Franco, this is the ENTIRE text of the ERA. There are no secret articles sanctioning homonormative marriages, there are no clauses designed to rob anyone of one’s privacy, and your assertion that ERA supporters are pushing for a “unisex society” is absurd at best. We have no desire to deprive or limit the right to privacy. We acknowledge the difference between the sexes. We do not believe we are the SAME sex, we believe that no person should be deprived of equality under the law, based merely upon one’s gender.

ERA is not a threat to the family unit, it will not draw women away from their children and force them to bear arms. What we desire is for the courts to view marriage as a “partnership” and recognize the valuable contribution of full-time homemakers to their family. This is an important legal status should these homemakers suddenly become widowed, divorced or separated.

The 14th Amendment offers uneven and uncertain protection against sex bias. The 14th Amendment, along with the 13th and 15th were added to the Constitution more than a century ago to abolish slavery and extend civil rights to blacks. At that time women were denied such basic perquisites of citizenship as the right to vote, hold property, or to serve on juries or practice certain occupations. The authors of the 14th Amendment did not intend to change these rules and equality must not have to depend upon the whims of individual lawmakers in individual states. It must be guaranteed by the Constitution.

A statute-by-statute piecemeal approach to eliminate sex discrimination, whether at the federal or state level, does not work.

Both the Republican and the Democratic parties have supported the ERA since 1940 until Mr. Reagan changed his mind in 1980 and decided to oppose it. Even he, however, supported it until then.

35 states have ratified the ERA, representing 75 percent of the population. It would certainly be futile if a handful of Southern states could successfully prevent the ERA from being ratified.

Instead of perpetuating abysmal failures, I suggest that Miss Franco and others who still believe the “unisex” myth among other abysmal, research the amendment and learn why the majority of Americans support passage of the Equal Rights Amendment. The battle is not over!

Military spendthrifts

Editor:

What are we to do about this military budget crisis? It seems to me that such a crisis could be done to streamline the military establishment and also a review of all pay scales brought into line with civilian minimum wage rates.

The Army has a new tank, the XM-1, and the more I think about this highly expensive vehicle the angrier I get. The people manufacturing probably earn at least $20 per hour, and Senator Proxmire tells me that it is not a wise investment. He goes on and on telling me that constant goldplating of easily destroyed weapons squanders our defense dollars and endangers our national security.

Find out how many civilian jobs pay as much as the military jobs pay? I don’t know of many, and I have never heard of 30 days paid vacation or 20 years retirement in a civilian job. What we voters need are some foreign military specialists to help us get a honest look at our military establishment.

What about our intelligence estimates of Soviet capability? Are they accurate and honest? What about Germany? Is it necessary to keep 300,000 men in that country? What about El Salvador? Just how many Commies are in the country? How do they get supplies? What about Israel? Do they have secret relations with the Soviets? Do they pass on the Soviet information about our air craft and other information intelligence?

I would also like to know if it isn’t coming to some kind of understanding with the Soviets? Neither side wins as things now stand except for the military-industrial establishment.
