Cal Poly Panel Presentation to Explore ‘Paths to Sustainability in Food and Agriculture’ on Jan. 23

Public Event Will Highlight Industry Advances in Sustainability

SAN LUIS OBISPO – The Cal Poly College of Agriculture, Food & Environmental Sciences’ Center for Sustainability will host a panel presentation titled “Paths to Sustainability in Food and Agriculture” from 3:30 to 5 p.m. Wednesday, Jan. 23, at Chumash Auditorium on campus.

Part of the center’s quarterly Sustainable Ag Lecture Series, the event is free and open to the public.

Panelists from four of California’s leading food producers and processors will share their expertise and experiences implementing sustainability programs and practices in their operations. The event will conclude with a question-and-answer session.

Guest speakers include: Cliff Ohmart, vice president of SureHarvest; Jocelyn Gretz, sustainable agriculture program manager for Rio Farms; Naomi Sakoda, sustainability specialist at Driscoll’s; and Duncan Dowdle, director quality assurance and technical services at Wawona Frozen Foods; and Gour Choudhury, head of the Cal Poly Food Science and Nutrition Department.

The event will precede the college’s 24th annual Ag Showcase hosted by the Agribusiness Management and National Agri-Marketing Association (ABM/NAMA) Club. Ag Showcase is a student-run job fair that allows students to network with company representatives and learn about internship and job opportunities in dozens of food and agricultural companies. The Ag Showcase will take place in the Agricultural Operations Building (Bldg. 9) from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 24. For details on Ag Showcase, visit http://agb.calpoly.edu/content/current/agshowcase.
