Four-story office building approved

City council OKs erection after appeal

By David Holbrook

The San Luis Obispo City Council voted Tuesday to allow construction of a four-story office building on the corner of Monterey and Toro Streets. The council's action upheld an appeal by local developers of an Architectural Review Commission's (ARC) earlier decision to deny plans for the project. The commission cited conflicts between the scale of the building and its location, an area where most of the buildings are single-story and where some residences remain.

The approximately 9,000 square-foot building will contain two stories of office space over two parking levels. The lowest level will be partially below ground level, making the building about three and one-half stories tall from ground level.

In a previous meeting the council expressed concerns about street-level retail space, which they said was necessary, given the high pedestrian traffic on Monterey Street. Since then, modifications have been made to the original plan.

A presentation by architect Brian Starr, who made the appeal proposal, showed that a maximum amount of retail space at the ground floor level had been added to attract pedestrians. A patio area will also be made between the building and the sidewalk, Starr said, for a restaurant or coffee shop.

“If (a project like this) is inappropriate anywhere,” Starr said, “then this area, in the center of town, near the county government center, surrounded with commercial and office spaces and convenient to other businesses and transportation, is the appropriate place.”

Coalition to oppose oil drilling

Group invites public to take part this Sunday

By Deborah Holley

Hands Across Our Beaches wants you.

This is the message from members of a local coalition inviting the public to join them in opposing offshore oil drilling.

On Sunday, Oct. 7, people are asked to hike, bike, walk or carpool to one of seven local beaches and join hands to signify public desire to protect coastal waters.

“People treat the ocean like it’s inexhaustible,” said Neil Langford, grassroots leader and event coordinator. “If it dies, we die.”

The total amount of oil available in our area would supply our country for less than 30 days, Langford said. “We don’t need to spoil our ocean for that.”

The coalition stated its mission simply: “Our country’s coastline is vital to local residents and the more than 50,000 people who use our beaches every year,” it says. “Protecting the health of our coastline, keeping it clean and safe from offshore development is an immediate concern for all of us who love the Central Coast.”

The event will begin at noon with speakers at various beach locations, live music and time for picnicking.

At 1 p.m., participants will form a line as the event’s theme song, Alabama’s “Pass It On Down,” is played at all locations and on radio. People are invited to play musical instruments, sing or read poetry at this time. At 2 p.m., everyone will join hands and there will be a national media flyover.

Ann Steel, event coordinator, said that Hands Across Our Beaches has been in contact with the environmental group Greenpeace. She said Greenpeace attorneys are tentatively scheduled to be in the area on Saturday to assist in drawing up a plan of action to stall oil drilling developments.

“We want to make it as hard and as expensive for these guys (oil interests) as possible,” Steel said.

San Diego’s Mission Beach is also staging Hands Across Our Beaches at the same time Sunday to demonstrate support for the Central Coast’s protest.

The coalition’s most recent meeting, attended by more than 25 people, applauded the gesture from San Diego. The consensus of the group was that the Central Coast is a beautiful area and should be kept that way.

Also represented at the meeting were Marine Sanctuary concerns.

John von Reis, county energy division manager, said that the Marine Sanctuary is a different way of looking at the waters off the coast.

“We need to look at protection of living resources,” he said.

Von Reis said that the San Luis Obispo County Board of Supervisors supports Marine Sanctuary, and that he hopes people who attend Sunday’s protest will also support it.

A proclamation has been issued by Lt. Governor Leo McCarthy in support of Hands Across Our Beaches, as well as proclamations from six local cities.

Former UC Berkeley chancellor helps Poly plan future

Heyman holds open forum with faculty, university officials

By Scott Abbott

A leader in the planning and future direction of higher education fielded questions Tuesday afternoon from Cal Poly administrators and faculty.

Michael Heyman, former chancellor of the University of California at Berkeley, answered questions that ranged from how to make students graduate in four years to how to make Cal Poly’s faculty more racially diverse.

The planning session, held in University Union and designed to aid the Cal Poly administration in attaining its future goals.

“As far as CSUs are concerned, Cal Poly is very highly thought of,” Heyman said. “If you go to Sacramento, the places that are talked about are San Francisco (State), San Diego (State) and Cal Poly.”

The university is currently taking a serious look at some of the problems which face students, including scheduling and prolonged graduation dates. The administration administered a few weeks ago that Cal Poly students are staying at the university longer than expected because many are unable to get required classes to graduate. The university is trying to cope with the problem by hiring more G.E. classes.

The English department offers writing classes of no more than 25 students. Ideally the number would be between 20 and 25 students. I think I am safe in saying that ideal numbers in the classroom will never be seen at a state university. This dilemma ties into the fact that as enrollment increases, teachers must bear most of the burden. Teachers are not paid higher salaries for increased amounts of work due to more students, but are expected to carry the burden, just as students are being asked to teach it out of their own.

For the 1989-90 school year, the student to teacher ratio was 17 to 1 at Cal Poly. This number varies from department to department depending upon the number of G.E. classes offered by the department. For example, in the School of Agriculture, the student to teacher ratio is 24 to 1 with only one G.E. class offered to non-agriculture majors under the F-requirement.

The political science department carries many sections of G.E. classes required by all majors. The department has carried up to 25 sections a quarter of combined classes. In turn, the student to teacher ratio for these classes is 200 to 1. Long said the over-enrollment has put a lot of stress on the students and pressure on the faculty. I don't like the odds. Whether or not a department offers many G.E. classes or none, the students to teacher ratios must be evened out.

Regardless of who is responsible, the over-population in the classrooms can effect a student's ability to learn. It is too bad that the students are put at a disadvantage because they attended a campus that has since become over-enrolled.

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — A record store owner today was found guilty of obscene for selling a record by the controversial rap group 2 Live Crew.

Jurors deliberated less than three hours before convicting Charles Freeman on a misdemeanor obscenity charge. He was arrested by undercover county sheriff's deputies June 8 for selling the Miami rap group's album "As Nasty As They Wanna Be" in his

E-C Records store.

Freeman could get a year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

"It doesn't represent my community where

E-C Records is," Freeman shouted as he left the courthouse. "It's unfair. The jury was all white. They don't know where E-C Records is. They don't know a thing about the ghetto."

Prosecutors contended the album exceeds the limits of community standards and free speech with explicit and sometimes violent references to sex. Freeman was sentenced two days after U.S. District Judge Jose Gonzalez ruled the lyrics were obscene.

"This will make America's economy more competitive while protecting American workers," Rep. Bruce Morrison, D-Conn., the sponsor, said following House approval of the measure, 231-192.

Supporters say the bill would reunify families while bringing in skilled workers and sharpening U.S. competitiveness in global markets. The Bush administration claims it would open the gates too wide.

Crossing out the X: SLO reacts to film industry rating change

By Natalie Guerrero

Same movie classifications — adult themes — but just a new title. But the new twist for filmmakers is the ability to market these movies to any theatre without being tainted "X-rated."

Movies formerly rated 'X' are now called NC-17, no children under 17 can be admitted.

Last week's decision from the Motion Picture Association of America (MPAA) to change its controversial X-rating has spurred debate among local theatre managers, students and church officials.

"Its great," said Jim Dee, manager of the Palm Theatre. "The X-rating has become useless since pornographic directors and movies basically have taken over that rating system.""I believe NC-17 will give the directors and producers a chance to release an adult film in its original form or tone it down for an R-rated movie," said Dor Leonard, Mission Theatre manager.

Both the Palm and Mission theatres are willing to show NC-17 movies. In the past, both theatres have shown movies with an X-rating, but have provided and displayed information about the mature material and subjects dealt in the movies. They plan to continue this informational approach with the NC-17 films.

But not everyone is pleased with the NC-17 decision. A statement issued by the communication leaders of the U.S. Catholic Conference and the National Council of Churches, which includes Newman Catholic Center said that a new NC-17 rating is not for movies and another way for adult-themed movies to make more money.

Rev. Vince Walsh from the Newman Catholic Center said that a rating system is helpful for people and parents to make wise judgement calls. See NC-17, page 8

Ghostly music from a Poly student

A Cal Poly student has been planning for Halloween for close to one year — but he’s been working on a record, not a costume.

Construction management senior Dave Della Santa has created a Halloween-themed single called "Boogie Man."
The single, produced by Steve Masters, a disc jockey on KITS Radio 105 in San Francisco, will be released by Oct. 12.

"I sent the demo tape in a pumpkin to Steve and he liked it," Della Santa said.

on another single and, possibly, an album. "Dave has got as good a chance as anyone (to succeed), but he's got to have a hit song," Masters said. "It's successful already to me."

Della Santa estimated the cost of the project at $4,000. "Masters paid for the promotion, and I paid for the production," Della Santa said. For the last five years at Cal Poly, Della Santa has played with several local bands: Brave New World, Soma and DV8. He is currently putting together a new band called "Scream Therapy," which is also the name of the single.

Della Santa hopes to play in clubs and parties in San Luis Obispo and eventually set up a commercial music company to make music for TV and radio commercials.

The coalition asks that people try to carpool as much as possible to Avila Beach, Cayucos, Grover City, Morro Bay, Oceano, Pismo Beach and San Simeon/Cambria. People can call 541-CREST for ride sharing information. Other suggestions include bringing warm clothing, a chair and a picnic and taking all trash home.
Michael Ambrose, Cuesta College student and hike coordinator, said that he will be leading hikers along the cliffs at Montana de Oro. He said that the location is beautiful, and he would like to see a good turnout there.
Also, assistance is needed at each location for child activities, emergency medical, traffic control and signature collection. Those interested in helping can call 543-4296.
Langford, who will lead the Pismo Beach group, said that she foresees people lined up along the beaches Sunday as far as one can see, and that everyone who participates will make the vision of stopping oil drilling off the California Coast a reality.

Heyman shares thoughts on integration

Poly can learn from Berkeley's minority policy

By Aaron Nix

Heyman attributed the change in student demographics largely to the influx of minorities to California. However, changes in the admissions process are equally responsible for the increasing proportion of minority students, he stated.

"During the '70s, the entire process had to be altered to allow for those under-represented students who showed potential," Heyman said. "We accepted some minority students who were not in the usual top 12 percent of graduating high school seniors."

There's a good reason your Collegiate Reps know how students think.

They’re students.

When it comes to knowing what it takes to get your work done, Collegiate Reps know where you're coming from.

They can demonstrate how easily you can use an IBM Personal System/2 to write papers and create graphics and spreadsheets for your classes.

They can answer your questions and help recommend the right matches for you from the affordable line of IBM PS/2.

To find out what an IBM PS/2 can do for you, come in, or call someone who thinks just like you do.

"During the '70s, the entire process had to be altered to allow for those under-represented students who showed potential," Heyman said. "We accepted some minority students who were not in the usual top 12 percent of graduating high school seniors."

By the beginning of the next decade, however, that practice was changed to draw in the most qualified students from all ethnic groups, he said.

"Now all students, drawn from the acceptable pool," Heyman said. "Last year the median grades for entering white and Asian students was 4.0, and for blacks and Hispanics it was 3.5. What we are seeing at Berkeley is no longer a disparate difference in students but rather an overall pool of striving achievers."

Still, there are those who question the standards for admission.

But some residents of the area expressed disapproval of the project, citing the building's height and possible contribution to traffic congestion along Toro Street.

Denise Gingg, of 969 Toro St., said the "building is too high for the area and out of character with the neighborhood."

She said that traffic from trucks that deliver cars to the nearby auto dealerships already pose hazardous traffic conditions and the building will compound those conditions.

Councilmembers, however, generally approved of the modifications made by Starr and heralded the project as a first step towards the redevelopment of upper Monterey Street.

"I think this area is in transition," said councilmember Penny Rapp. "I think that through our general plan update we are going to see COUNCIL, page 11 ccepting even those students in the acceptable pool of applicants, those in the top 12 percent. Heyman attributes much of the friction with the admissions process and the fierce competition it creates to Berkeley's growth in recent years.

"In 1974, virtually everyone who applied to Berkeley was accepted. Last year, 16 percent of applicants were accepted. In that kind of competitive atmosphere, those students who are going to be understandably bitter," he said.

Most of those who criticize the admissions criteria feel the university is not setting appropriate standards. Heyman said, basing student actachment solely on academic worth.

"They are missing the point," he said. "The goal of a university is to seek a broad range of students.

Heyman pointed out some similarities in the way Cal State Berkeley is facing to those happening at Cal Poly. He said many things could have been learned from Berkeley's experiences and the studies being conducted there to tackle the problem of integration.

Some useful suggestions have resulted from those studies, Heyman said. He cited some of the recommendations:

• Organize groups of 10 to 15 students and faculty members to meet and discuss the progress of integration efforts on campus.

• Give support to single and cross-ethnic support groups.

• Demystify the admissions process by releasing reports on figures for all students.

Heyman said the steps being taken by Berkeley would be aplicable at Cal Poly because of a certain kinship that exists between the two schools.

"Both schools are the most selective in their systems, so some of their problems are very similar," he said. "They have imituated a diverse student body and are on the light of a great deal of fear that the diversification has been achieved, integration must also take place."

"You can't possibly be a good teacher unless you're at the forefront of research," Heyman said. "Professors in technology should be abreast of what is going on in the university in order to have original thoughts."

Another problem facing higher education, Heyman said, is creating more racial integration in the university faculties so that appropriate architecture in the future.
