Bake: Explore charter further
He asks Senate to look at problems, debunk misconceptions of change
By Brad Hamilton
Senior Staff Writer
In a special meeting Friday, President Warren Baker, director of the Academic Senate Executive Committee, met to continue evaluating the effectiveness of Cal Poly’s potential switch to become the CSU’s first “charter” university. Baker also urged the 11 senators to discuss with their departments what problems a switch to a charter system would incur.
Baker said he wanted the entire campus to develop a clear understanding of what a charter system would achieve at Cal Poly, and why it should be adopted. Becoming a charter university would allow a campus more flexibility in all levels of decision-making, including funding, curriculum, enrollment, programs and the academic calendar, according to Baker.
“As a charter school, Cal Poly would submit to the CSU Board of Trustees and chancellor its own policy, and we will be governed by that policy,” he said.
Baker added that a charter system would allow Cal Poly to avoid CSU regulations that don’t apply to it.
“Being over-regulated, in a sense, impedes progress,” he said.
As an example, Baker said financial aid moneys are considered for charter status. As such, he said, financial aid monies are not returned to the university, the same proportion that the CSU takes from funds it has available.
Despite Baker’s contention that a charter system could benefit the campus by localizing authority, Barbara Mort, an associate professor of political science, said some of her colleagues viewed a charter system as problematic.
“The Academic Senate is seen by some as powerless” in the current system, she added that a charter system may not improve faculty influence on policy.
Music professor Craig Russell said Baker’s position that a charter system might permit the Legislature to view charters universities as different from the other campuses and possibly permit unequal treatment.
Russell said he wondered whether Cal Poly, or any other campus, might be targeted for greater budget reductions than other CSU campuses.
But Baker reassured the committee that Cal Poly would be treated no differently than any other state university.
“(Cal Poly) would receive the same funds as other CSU campuses under the jurisdiction of the CSU Board of Trustees,” Baker said.
In January, CSU Chancellor Barry Mintz invited Cal Poly to be the system’s first charter campus, an alternative to a proposed charter system and a promulgated model campus at Fort Ord, Orin O’Neill, director of special projects, said the Senate was being considered for charter status.
Munitz asked Cal Poly to develop a model plan for a charter campus, which would be reviewed by the Senate. A charter plan was scheduled to be implemented by January 1994. But at a March meeting the Senate tabled a vote. See CHARTER, page 7

Bosnian government and rebel Serbs sign cease-fire
United States still prepared for possible military action
By Brad Hamilton
Senior Staff Writer
- SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — A new cease-fire began throughout Bosnia at noon Sunday, and U.N. military observers headed for Zepa to oversee the demilitarization of the embattled eastern Muslim enclave.

The Bosnian government and rebel Serbs signed an agreement late Saturday for a nationwide truce and the demilitarization of Zepa and another eastern Muslim town, Srebrenica.

Many truces have been broken in the year-old Bosnian conflict, but the Bosnian Serbs came under increasing pressure to stop the fighting when the Yugoslav government said it would cut off all fuel and medical aid to the rebels.

Before the cease-fire went into effect, The Sunday Times of London reported that U.S. warplanes will begin bombing key Serb targets in Bosnia within 10 days in an attempt to stop the war.

The Sunday Times, citing unnamed military and diplomatic sources in Washington and London, said 560 fighters and bombers at American bases in Turkey, Italy and Germany will attack bridges, roads and artillery positions.

Britain has agreed to participate but not necessarily in the first attack, a British source told the newspaper.

In Washington, White House spokeswoman Lorraine Yokes said she could not confirm the report and declined further comment.

President Clinton reaffirmed his readiness to intervene militarily in Bosnia after Serbs rejected a U.N.-backed peace plan for the third time last week.

Clinton has said he does not want to act unilaterally, however, and in a recent six-day swing through Europe, Secretary of State Warren Christopher failed to overcome allied reluctance to use force.

More than 134,000 people have been declared missing or dead since Bosnian Serbs rebelled against Muslims and Croats who voted last year to secede from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

In Bosnia, U.N. officials cautioned it will take several days to see if the cease-fire will hold. The truce was not signed by Bosnian Croats, who have been battling Muslim government troops in central Bosnia for weeks. Peaceful Muslim-Croat fighting was reported in Mostar and Konjic on Sunday.

A Ukrainian company of medical and civil engineering workers and a team of medical personnel were scheduled to set out from Sarajevo for Zepa on Sunday afternoon, said a U.N. spokesman. Cmdr. Barry Prower.

A three-week meeting to draw up new human rights standards ended Saturday with signs of a looming battle over demands for a powerful U.N. commission to clamp down on violations.
The showdown — pitting the West and its allies against developing countries led by China, Iran and Pakistan — is expected at a conference in Vienna, Austria, next month.

Setting the stage for confrontation, U.S. delegate J. Kenneth Blackwell said Washington would not agree to any document in Vienna that did not toughen existing standards.

Nations likely to face accusations of rights violations have spearheaded the resistance, fearing greater Western interference in their domestic affairs.

The June meeting — the highest level gathering on human rights in 25 years — is meant to assess the global state of human rights, draw up new measures on the rights of women and consider better enforcement of international standards.

After much wrangling and debate, government representatives from more than 100 countries agreed early Saturday on a draft declaration for the Vienna meeting.

But the text merely represents a collection of differing viewpoints. It is filled with brackets indicating disagreement over fundamental issues as the need for more encouragement of democracy, individual civil liberties, tougher measures against torturers and respect for minority rights.

A proposal for the U.N. secretary-general to prepare an annual report on the state of human rights throughout the world is also heavily bracketed.

The most controversial part is the demand by Western countries for stronger U.N. human rights review and enforcement, including appointment of a high commissioner for human rights.

The draft proposes the commissioner should have the authority to tell the U.N. Security Council about particularly serious violations; send special envoys on fact-finding missions; and monitor human rights issues in U.N. peacekeeping and aid operations.

West European nations and groups such as Amnesty International have long supported the idea of a such a post — similar to the U.N. high commissioner for refugees. The Clinton administration has also enthusiastically supported the plan in contrast to former President Bush who argued it would merely add to the U.N. bureaucracy.

Nations opposed are led by China, Cuba, Iran, Syria and Pakistan. There is reportedly opposition from most Asian and Latin American nations, but growing support among fledgling democracies in Africa.

Postmaster: Reduce job stress
Dana Point, Calif.
U.S. Postmaster General Marvin Runyon said Saturday the Postal Service must alter its management to reduce stress and the risk of violence among employees.

Runyon made the comment following the fatal shootings of postal workers at post offices in Dearborn, Mich., and Dana Point, Calif.

In the Michigan case, postal mechanic Larry Jasion killed a co-worker and wounded two others before fatally shooting himself.

In California, former employee Mark Richard Hilbun allegedly killed a former co-worker and wounded another. Police believe Hilbun also killed his mother and wounded four other people before his capture early Saturday at a Huntington Beach bar.

Runyon said the Postal Service is trying to identify circumstances that could lead to violence and confrontation in its workforce. Changes will include a less authoritarian management style, he said.

"We are changing the culture of this organization," he said. "... That culture won't change overnight. But this culture change can't trickle down from the top, either. It has to flood down.

T.H. Greene, who said he discovered Hadden's body the night of the murder, was on hand to witness the execution. Before the execution, he said: "I hated to see a trash animal kill a good man.

Johnson was the 201st person executed nationwide since the U.S. Supreme Court allowed states to resume imposing capital punishment in 1976. He became the 31st inmate executed since Florida reinstated the death penalty in 1979.

Defense cuts damage job market
Washington, D.C.
Work in U.S. manufacturing industries is the scarcest in nearly three decades, and those jobs — once the backbone of the American economy — are due for still heavier blows as the effects of defense spending cuts take hold.

A study by a Labor Department economist estimates that if President Clinton's proposed defense cuts are carried out, 594,000 manufacturing jobs will disappear between now and 1997. That's even more slots than the military itself would lose.

What's worse, the study says, the defense-related manufacturing jobs most likely to be eliminated are held by people with relatively little formal education. Thus they are likely to have a harder-than-usual time finding other jobs.

Clinton recognizes the risk to manufacturing, and he's trying to put into place a comprehensive "defense conversion" program to retain laid-off defense workers and to find new civilian markets for the remaining defense companies.

Latinos face culture shock
Students speak on campus prejudice, stereotypes

By Amy Hooper
Staff Writer

Latinos at Cal Poly say, in addition to working toward a university degree, they face further challenges — including the daily struggle to overcome cultural stereotypes and prejudice.

Sitting around a table in the University Union on Saturday, students of Latino descent voiced their experiences and views as minority students at a predominantly white university.

Amos Gonzalez and Alejandro Perez, both computer engineering freshmen, said that while they were walking to the weight room one night, two students made a distinct effort to avoid them.

"We saw two guys walking toward us, and we were just walking down the street," Perez said. "They looked at us kind of scared, and they saw me (wearing) the hood. So they walked around us around the corner." Gonzalez added, "You could really tell they walked around us. It's not something you could miss.

"I don't know. Maybe they think we're gang-related from the way we look or something." Gonzalez cited a mechanical engineering junior, said he and the freshmen were once pulled over by San Luis Obispo police officers for no apparent reason.

"We didn't really know what the problem was," he said. Martinez said the officer commented on their attire and black hats before asking for identification.

After asking Martinez to get out of the car, the officer asked him to remove his jacket so he could check for tattoos.

"I have encountered it, not indirectly but directly. I don't know if it has to do with my major. I just say there's a lot of negativity," said Martinez. Aguilera cited a former journalism instructor who questioned her ability to earn a degree.

"He kind of put me down. He said, 'Why are you here?' "

"I have to come up with my own money, because my parents can't help me," Aguilera said. "My parents aren't union professional."

Liz Sanchez, an architecture senior, said Latino students were faced with the misconceptions that they are lazy, quiet, unintelligent and only capable of performing menial labor.

"It stimulates you," she said. "It's like when they tell you, 'Well, you can't do it.' If you're strong, you'll say, 'Yes, I can do it.'

Because of their appearance, some of the students said, people have treated them like they were gang members.

Aguilera quoted Martinez's sentiments. "Racism exists at Cal Poly," she said.

Concerned

By Robert Willhoite

I can see folks trying to label me as a "radical" after reading this, but it's not true. My father served in the Vietnam War. He saw people die in the name of vague political objectives, but he doesn't complain.

My mother sacrificed the prime years of her life to stay home and provide me with an environment in which I could become people of worth. She didn't complain about the last years, either. If I could sum up all the magnificent things my parents taught me in one sentence, it would be "Oh! So it is!" They urged me to make sense of the world and not settle for some of the lies the government has become a crime? If only the government officials would take over in about 40 years. If Rick can not deal with reality than maybe he is the one that should leave.

Comments

Although it is too easy to comment on the idiocy of Gregory Role's article (April 6) which state that the only redeeming value of a semester system is the advantage of more time to make you move on a "hot woman," I found myself unable to let this one slide. It is obvious that the letter was written in an attempt to stir controversy which was wrong. I say that if Mr. Hartlaub does not like the ways of the whites that he should leave America. How many people that came to this land did not have a choice. Reality check! Latinos were here far before he or his forefathers invaded this area. Where do you think names such as Alcacios, Pueblo Robles and San Luis Obispo came from? His forefathers would have called them Mudobles, Robles' pass and St. Louis the Bishop had been here before. Therefore, Mr. Hartlaub has more of a right to stay here than Rick does. Why should he be able to leave anywhere, when Latinos are going to take over in about 40 years. If Rick can not deal with reality than maybe he is the one that should leave.

They're taking over!

Thursday's (April 6) edition of Mustang Daily featured a letter by Rick Carlile in which he blasted Peter Hartlaub's (capitalized as a sign of respect for the great editor) commentary on the ignorance of white people. I find it impossible to make sense of that letter that if Hartlaub does not like the ways of the whites that he should leave America. How many people that came to this land did not have a choice. Reality check! Latinos were here far before he or his forefathers invaded this area. Where do you think names such as Alcacios, Pueblo Robles and San Luis Obispo came from? The "plantation mentality"

In response to Leo Durance's Chijleta, anyone? (April 7): Rejecting the "plantation mentality" consists of more than merely changing your last name, conforming to the identity of "Americans," and wearing a red-and-white flag. It represents an acceptance of other cultures and people, regardless of whether they work at Taco Bell or sell chilis in J.J. Four acceptance of the people, to be consistent, should not stop at the U.S.Mexico border. Our forebears came to this country to save the ignorance of white people. This was the best opinion article that I read in both this and last week's Mustang Daily. Mr. Hartlaub has more of a right to stay here than Rick does. Why should he be able to leave anywhere, when Latinos are going to take over in about 40 years. If Rick can not deal with reality than maybe he is the one that should leave.

 Trouble brewing as Berkeley shops curb studying

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — Trouble is brewing as coffeehouses are trying to get students to kick the study habit while installing their one for java.

A growing number of cafes near the University of California at Berkeley are limiting the amount of time customers can spend nursing a cafe latte over their textbooks during peak hours.

"A cafe that is turned into a crowded study hall can be a nightmare," said Scott Grenfell, manager of the Edible Complex on College Avenue in north Oakland.

"There's no room for new customers. No one is talking. No one is buying anything. It's absurd," he said.

But students who enjoy cafe society are as steamed as milk in a cappuccino.

"When I'm buying a cup of coffee, I'm renting space," said Dana Randall, a graduate student in mathematics who holds office hours there, drinking coffee and poring over books and writing on laptop computers.

Students say it is easier to concentrate in a cafe than in a library and argue that they bring coffeehouses a major portion of their revenues.

The flood of students increased during last December's strike by graduate students. Graduate instructors used coffeehouses as classrooms, and some still use cafes as offices.

Not all cafes, however, are discouraging students from lingering. Cafe Strada has no intention of limiting study time, said manager Joe Diaz, who noted that 90 percent of customers are students.

CHARTER

Some Cal Poly faculty and staff members have contended that a move to the charter structure would be a union-busting measure, since charter universities would not be bound by state or CSU regulations.

Aurelia Castaneda, a California State Employees Association union representative and a Cal Poly health services clerical assistant, said the charter concept is "one of the biggest union-busting things you're going to see in a long time."

Baker said he recognized the faculty's and staff's concerns, but added: "It is within your purview to address those issues."

Jack Wilson, chair of the Academic Senate, said the charter plan would allow Cal Poly to overhaul instruction university-wide.

"Looking at the possibility of a charter allows time to look at the entire curriculum and determine how units can be reduced and quality maintained," Wilson said. "I think Cal Poly is great, but we have to keep changing," he said.

In another discussion, Baker also suggested a switch to a trimester system as a way of enrolling more students and increasing teacher salaries.

The trimester system involves three, 12 1/2 week terms. Wilson said a recent survey presented to the Academic Senate found 32 percent of the faculty favored the quarter system, 54 percent favored semesters and 6 percent favored trimesters.

Wilson said the trimester system would encourage faculty members to work longer during the year and earn higher salaries. It would also attract young faculty, he added.

Baker said a trimester system would work if a consistent number of students attended each trimester. A switch to a charter university would likely take two years, according to Baker.

together and you generalize like that, it really hurts," she said. "Overall, it hurts you personally because you're denying what you really are."

Veronica Soria, an aeronautical engineering junior, said the language varies within the Spanish-speaking world, contributing to the diversity of Spanish speakers.

"Even within the Spanish language, each country has their own dialect, too," she said; Soria herself is a Salvadoran. "Because (other Latinos will) be talking, and I won't understand them."

Culture shock confronted a number of the students when they arrived in San Luis Obispo. Soria said in coming from Napa, she experienced reverse culture shock.

"I went to a white school since kindergarten," she said. "I came here, and I had never seen so many brown faces. The only Spanish-speaking people I knew were my friends and my family, and then I came here, and I was like, 'Oh my God!'"

In contrast, Martinez said the predominance of white people at Cal Poly disconcerted him; Martinez arrived from a mostly-black high school in Richmond, Calif.

"When I got here, even on the football team there were only three or four of us who weren't white," he said. "To me that was really strange."

"After the second day, I was ready to head home."

Martinez said the only thing that stopped him was meeting two women from his high school at Cal Poly.

"Every night after practice, I would go up to their room, and we would be there together. "That was the closest thing I had to home."

Mustangs win CCAA baseball crown

Saturday sweep combined with losses by foes results in title

By Christopher Black

Supposed to end Saturday, Cal Poly's baseball team had already swept all the California Collegiate Athletic Association teams with three wins.

This season, however, Cal Poly won the title outright.

Cal Poly, which lost to the Coyotes 6-2 Friday night, was able to assure itself of finishing the conference crown.

Cal Poly Pomona entered the weekend only 1½ games behind the Mustangs but lost Friday and split a doubleheader with Dominguez Hills Saturday.

UC Riverside, which also was tied for first in the conference tournament, was eliminated for a 4-1 tournament record.

The Mustangs (18-7 in CCAA, 31-16 overall) finished 15-15 (28-4) for the season.

Poly won both of its games Sunday and received help from other CCAA opponents to sweep the conference crown.

Cal Poly coach Steve McFarland said of his hurlers' efforts Saturday, "Coupled with good defense today, we played as good as we could play."

Behind the complete-game victories of seniors Paul Souza and Scott Mollahan, Cal Poly improved its CCAA record to 17-10 (31-16 overall).

On Friday, Cal Poly's Dan Cherey — the all-time innings pitched and saves leader — added two more records to his collection as he struck out 12 batters, surpassing Mike Krakow's previous all-time mark of 274, bringing his total to 283.

In addition, Cherey completed a game for the seventh time this season, helping him top Bruce Freeberg's all-time complete-game total with 29.

Souza retired the first 15 batters he faced en route to an 8-3 victory despite surrendering 11 hits.

Souza (8-5) gave up three runs on just four hits, walked two and struck out five.

Neal went 3-for-4 with two doubles, four runs batted in, a run scored and a stolen base.

Sennich went 2-for-4, including his fourth home run of the season.

Sennich also provided the game-winning RBI in the sixth inning when he drove a two-out baserunner to right, scoring Jon Macalutas from second base.

"I got in a little groove," said Mollahan. "The breaking ball was working well, and once that's established, it makes the fastball look much harder."

Mollahan (6-1) gave up one run over seven innings, allowing three hits, walking none and striking out four.

Like Saturday's opener, it was a two-out baserunner that provided the game-winning run. With two down, the bases loaded and Cal Poly leading 1-0, outfielder Scott Ferreira lined a basehit to right, scoring Grant Munger and Ben Boulware for what proved to be the deciding runs.

Incidentally, of the 15 runs that Cal Poly put on the board Saturday, 13 were scored with two outs.

"That's a real tribute to the way we concentrated all day long," said McFarland. "The guys had some real big at bats at important times today."

Cal Poly could possibly travel to Riverside for a three-game series starting Friday. CCAA officials, however, will rule today whether those games will be played.

Poly falls in tennis finals

Playoffs

After defeating California Collegiate Athletic Association rival Cal State Bakersfield in the opening round, Poly went on to best Atlantic Christian.

Appie Kim Borah came from behind to defeat Cal Poly's Beth Ciancio, 7-5, 6-4 in the No. 6 singles spot to lift Davis to the title.

Borah's 3-6, 7-5, 7-4 (7-2) victory despite surrendering 12 hits.

Davis (28-3) last won the national championship in 1990 when it beat Cal Poly Pomona in the team finals.

In other matches Sunday, Cal Poly's lone win came from freshman Michelle Bertkowitz, who best Karen Arthuckle 3-6, 6-4, 6-2.

The girls had a great year and came in second out of over 200 Division II schools," Epstein said. "Hopefully learned from the (loss) and we can get them back next year."

Cal Poly Pomona took third place by beating Atlantic Christian 5-2 Sunday.

The individual singles and doubles championships begin on Monday with the finals being played Thursday.

Sixth in the last two seasons, Cal Poly's softball team has missed all the California Collegiate Athletic Association tournaments with three wins.

This season, however, Cal Poly went the title outright, although those three games are tentative.

"We got two really good pitching performances," Cal Poly coach Steve McFarland said of his hurlers' efforts Saturday. "Coupled with good defense today, we played as good as we could play."

UC Riverside, which also was tied for first in the conference tournament, was eliminated for a 4-1 tournament record.

The Mustangs (18-7 in CCAA, 31-16 overall) finished 15-15 (28-4) for the season.

Poly won both of its games Sunday — beating Chapman and Cal State San Bernardino Saturday while falling to Bakersfield.

"We played well the entire weekend," Poly coach Lisa Boyer said. "We didn't compete real well in the first set of all our matches and they jumped on us and basically controlled it from there."

Cal Poly held a 4-1 lead entering the sixth before the Roadrunners struck for two runs in the sixth and three in the seventh.

Bakerfield's Marilyn Carroll singled to center to start the sixth with two outs to score two runs and break the 4-4 deadlock.

Marlo Albert went 3-for-4 in the game while Christie Collier went 2-for-3, including a solo homer in the second.

Cal Poly concluded play in the Showdown with an 11-0 triumph over Cal State San Bernardino.

Laurie Weidenheimer went 3-for-3, scored two runs and hit a triple for the Mustangs while teammate Christy Punches homered in the fourth and had two other hits. Julie Zerbe also provided a solo home run in the fourth.
