Clinton advocates air strikes in Bosnia

By Barry Silver
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration endorsed a U.N. report Monday threatening air strikes if the Serbs attack peacekeepers in two key towns.

U.S. intelligence estimated Croatia was pouring troops into Bosnia-Herzegovina in an apparent attempt to offset gains by the Serbs at attack peaskeepers in two key towns.

Endorsement of the U.N. secretary-general's report gives new impetus to the threat of air strikes if the Serbs attack peacekeepers in two key towns.

An administration official, insisting on anonymity, said this could lead to U.S. moves in the United Nations to impose the tough economic sanctions on Croatia of the kind that has crippled Serbia's economy.

Miscalculation forces bailout of Cal Grants

University shuffles funds after student aid projection falls short

By Lee Arrows
Poly Assistant Managing Editor

Unknown to some California State University students receiving financial aid, funding for a portion of their aid packages for spring was in jeopardy last week.

But emergency action from the California Department of Finance and the CSU system during the weekend saved Cal Poly students from losing their financial aid.

Administration officials in the financial aid departments of both campuses recently learned that they had overextended their available state university student aid grants, promising funds to more students than they could possibly support.

To make matters worse, the state agency which delivers Cal Grant checks to local aid offices found itself in a similar situation.

According to Cal Poly Financial Aid Director Diane Ryan, the funding shortage stems from two distinct sources: Cal Grants and state university grants. Managers for both made the same error, but only university grants are the direct responsibility of Cal Poly, she said.

For Cal Poly students, the overextensions totaled $298,000 — $200,000 of which was Cal Poly's responsibility to cover.

The Cal Grants were covered in an emergency loan by the California Department of Finance, Ryan said.

"What we're dealing with is a non-event," she said.

"And I'm happy to announce that.

Shortfalls in the state university grants at Cal Poly were met by a redistribution of money within the system. But CSU-San Francisco has yet to fill a $1 million gap in its obligations, according to Ryan.

The shortfall at both campuses resulted from a failure last year to properly forecast the student demand for aid this spring. More students cashed in their financial aid checks than was anticipated, Ryan said.

It is standard policy to grant more students aid than the system can support, she said. The rationale behind such a system is that a certain number of applicants are expected to back out of attending the university, freeing up the money for others.

This planned overextension at Cal Poly usually runs at about $20,000 to $30,000 a year, that was too much.

"It's been a difficult year to forecast (demand)," Ryan said. She cited budget cuts to the CSU, increasing student fees and the generally poor condition of the California economy as reasons for the difficulty.

"We're dealing with a real moving target," she said.

Financial aid no longer has the resources to provide the same level of aid as it previously offered, Ryan said.

"I already know that we don't have enough (grants) for next year," she said — which explains the 50 percent increase in students taking out loans this year over last. Ryan said.

That was one remaining guaranteed — albeit more difficult for students — method of financing an education.

INSIDE TODAY'S MUSTANG DAILY
It was a beautiful spring day. Classes were meeting on lawns and sidewalks around the building. Some students were even taking exams in the sun.

Yet this was no celebration of the weather. As the bright yellow and red signs announced, the students' classrooms were closed due to a bomb threat. It has been a while since this scenario has been played out at Cal Poly.

But prior to this recent quiet period, the school experienced some tumultuous times. Classes were regularly disrupted, usually around exam time, by callers claiming to have planted a bomb somewhere on campus. The aim of the threats seemed to be the postponement of tests.

In 1992, the last year for which figures are available, Cal Poly received 18 bomb threats. The large number of threats gave the school quite a reputation. In fact, bomb threats are still synonymous in some people's minds with Cal Poly.

When bomb threats were mentioned to Tom Fitzpatrick, Public Safety administrator for the California State University system, the first campus he thought of was Cal Poly.

"You guys used to have a real problem down there," Fitzpatrick said.

Those involved in preventing bomb threats on campus appear to be claiming victory, however. While no hard statistics are available, it is readily apparent that the number of bomb threats on campus has declined sharply over the last year. Only one occurred in fall quarter.

School officials point to their "get-tough" stance as the main reason for the decline.

When it became clear that the bomb threat trend of 1992 was continuing in early 1993, school officials went on the offensive. The main thrust of the plan was to set up alternate class sites in case of a threat. The main goal of most threats, to get exams postponed, would be rendered unattainable.

Publicizing the dangers of bomb threats, as well as the penalties for making them, was another part of the plan. One former student discovered first-hand what those penalties are.

Gamini Weerasekara, once an agricultural science senior at Cal Poly, was arrested during spring quarter of 1992 and charged with making bomb threats.

He was sentenced to 20 days in jail and to two years of probation. He also was ordered to pay a $250 fine and to perform 60 hours of community service.

School officials wouldn't say whether Weerasekara was expelled for making the threat. But Carl Wallace, director for Campus Student Relations and Judicial Affairs, said "expulsion is the order with bomb threats."

While everyone involved agrees that it's possible the perpetrators of past threats have simply left Cal Poly, the change in enforcement and response tactics is cited as the major reason for the decline in threats.

"We changed our response," said Steve Schroeder, interim police chief. "We didn't always evacuate the buildings that were threatened."

He said public safety officials made judgment calls as to when a bomb threat seemed likely to be a hoax.

Last academic year, Cal Poly was Home of the Bomb Threat. This year, there have been hardly any scares. Did the university's new get-tough policy scare off the pranksters — or is it simply luck?

street outside a food distribution center were trying to stop the shooting.

The commander of Bangladesh soldiers guarding a nearby traffic circle said his men did not see any snipers when the Marines opened fire with machine guns but he could not rule out that shots were fired at the Americans. Journalists at a nearby hotel heard one or two gunshots a moment before heavy wagging.

Dozens of Somalis ran through the area shouting anti-American slogans, and carrying the dead and wounded away on wheelbarrows. A dozen Saudi Arabian soldiers were handing out food at the center when the shooting occurred, but none was injured.

About 5,000 American servicemen are in Somalia as part of the U.N. peacekeeping force. The Americans are in the process of withdrawing to meet a March 8 deadline set by President Clinton after 18 U.S. Army soldiers died in a battle with Somali gummies Oct. 3.

At least 32 Americans have been killed since a U.S.-led multina- tional force landed Dec. 9, 1992 to protect relief supplies in Somalia.

The Michigan researchers said they noticed a relaxing of attitudes about the dangers of drugs among eighth-, 10th- and 12th-graders in a year- survey.

"These attitudes and beliefs, specifically the dangers believed to be associated with the use of these drugs ... play a critical role in deterring use," said Lloyd Johnston, who directed the study. "When they begin to af- fect, as they did last year, an in- crease in use can be expected."

He said the issue of drug use fell off the radar screen, during the previous decade and "we may have been hilled into a false sense of security."

The study found a three or four percentage-point rise in the use of marijuana in the previous 30 days among fourth-graders, 10th- and 12th-graders.

The proportion trying LSD was significantly increasing among eighth- and 12th-graders.

There has been a rise in cigarette smoking, too, 10 years ago steadily decline.

After falling from favor in the 1970s and 1980s, LSD use has been increasing gradually and there has been a rise in the use of in- halants like glue, solvents and aerosols.

"With more young people smoking cigarettes and using marijuana, and with the psychological and social on- straints to use declining, the stage is set for a potential resurgence of cocaine and crack use."

University of Michigan researchers surveyed 51,600 high school and eighth-grade youths in more than 400 schools.

Eight percent of the eighth- graders, 14 percent of 10th- and 12th-graders in a year- survey.

Bad timing on salary hike

President Warren Baker’s salary rose with such speed last week that it’s amazing he didn’t get a nosebleed. And campus reaction to the president’s 18 percent salary hike — approved last week in Long Beach by the California State University Board of Trustee — was the wrong word right now.

It should never even come into question. And yet it still does. And the CSU isn’t — or at least wasn’t — a corporately run bureaucracy urging us further along the road of top-heavy bureaucracy. It is the CSU’s biggest symptom: an out-of-touch, top-priority — far more important to be paid like a president, perhaps, than to act presidential.

But the CSU isn’t — or at least wasn’t — a corporate entity. Baker is lobbying for Cal Poly to have more autonomy — the voice of the students. Their opinion should be typed, double spaced, and under 250 words.

Letters are posted for clarity, grammar, and length. Letters, faxes and e-mails should be typed, double spaced, and under 250 words.

Mustang Daily welcomes letters and comments from students, staff, and other community members. Letters should be brief, double spaced and under 250 words. Comments, faxes and e-mails should be under 750 to 1,000 words.

When news becomes entertainment

President Marquam Piros. They shouldn’t assume that students are passive in this debate, they’ll have less right to complain if they fail to demand of the board members themselves for not demanding that their convictions.

If the directors fail to demand that Baker listen, then they will have only themselves to blame when their voices are not heard.

This sensational, titillating news has found its way past the romance novels, past the supermarket tabloids, past the talk shows and into the six o’clock news.

Prime time television is guilty of this as well. Two weeks ago, Roseanne decided a whole show to manufacture a sexual harassment issue. June Cleaver would never have done that.

Nevertheless, these topics are becoming more frequent on television shows. And the channel that sustains us. He is guilty, she is guilty. We all have limits. Movie-makers are realizing that even 8- and 9-year-olds don’t get excited unless they hear a dirty word or catch a quick glimpse of somebody’s butt.

We want sex. Of course, we still hear Tom Brokaw, Katie Couric and Bryant Gumbel report the news. But Amy Fisher, Lyle Menendez and Michael Jackson are more entertaining. And the Lorena Bobbitts and Amy Fishers in today’s newscasts will be thrown like scrap to the people who make Sunday night movies. Believe me, it will happen. I even heard somewhere that Shannon Doherty might be cast to play Tonya Harding.

Assemble passes five ‘Three Strikes’ bills

By Janice Ker
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO — In an election-year anti-crime frenzy, the California Assembly passed five ‘Three Strikes, You’re Out’ bills on Monday.

Lawmakers also debated whether to increase penalties for people carrying concealed guns without a permit, a bill strongly opposed by gun groups.

The bill by Assemblyman Bill Jones, R-Pomona, that is identical to the ‘Three Strikes’ initiative to throw criminals in prison for life on a third offense was approved 50-10.

The Assembly also approved bills by Assemblyman Richard Kitz, D-Panorama City, and Assemblyman Paul Feenstra, a young girl who was murdered.

The bills, which will have to be reworked in the Senate, would impose lengthy sentences on people convicted of multiple crimes. The bills differ mainly on what kind of crime, violent or nonviolent, are considered ‘strikes’ and what the ultimate punishment is.

The concealed gun bill fell short on its first vote, but the bill was held open while the Assembly debated other bills. The bill would allow people carrying a concealed gun without a permit to be charged with either a misdemeanor or a felony; current law is the former only.

The author, Assemblyman Richard Katz, D-Panorama City, brandedished a pistol, a dagger and brass knuckles to show that possession of the knife and knuckles is currently a felony, while the gun is not.

The Assembly defeated three amendments backed by gun groups that would have made it easier to get a concealed weapons permit.

The original ‘Three Strikes’ bill was introduced a year ago by Jones and Assemblyman Jim Costa, D-Fresno, at the urging of constituent Mike Reynolds, whose daughter was murdered by a repeat offender. The bill stalled in the Assembly Public Safety Committee last year and Reynolds launched his initiative, again for Mike, the Assembly defeated.

The kidnapping and murder of Polly Klaas of Petaluma last fall gave new impetus to Reynolds initiative and Jones’ bill.

AGENDA: Tranquility instead of bomb threats

Public Safety Director Joe Risser added that a change of heart by heavy-potential callers was possible.

"Maybe people just don’t think those threats are as fim anymore," Risser said.

"Also, maybe it’s because it hasn’t been brought up as an option in a while," he added with a hint of warning. "I wish (the Daily) wouldn’t run that story. I want to be very clear about the what."

In fact, everyone contacted about this story expressed essentially the same concern, and were reluctant to talk about the subject.

"I suspect (if the Daily) prints this, we’ll get more threats," Bailey said.

Dean of the College of Science and Mathematics Philip Bailey was equally concerned.

"But the likelihood of that happening to a child is about as great as getting struck by lightning. It would happen, but we just don’t get to see it. But it’s more likely that a child would be enticed or seduced in a relationship by a molester."

One common risk for the most common victims of abduction by strangers, two-thirds of which involve sexual assault, African-American and Hispanic children are represented in disproportionately high numbers.

For all the media attention, which has helped in recovering abducted children, the number of cases said to be solved doesn’t cause kidnappers to be found often anymore, said Ben Ermini, director of case management at the missing children’s center in Washington, D.C.

"There is a definite danger out there," said Ermini, a former Yonkers, N.Y., police officer. "But we don’t want to scare children to death. The important part is to make sure parents are aware and take the necessary steps and time to sit down with their children and advise them.

"Rather than worry about a kidnapper coming into their homes, parents should prepare their children for the possibility of a predator. Strangers, the artful lure or stranger’s temptation, exist, and they agree.

The good news is that an estimated 114,000 abduction attempt attempts are averted each year. Some parents have equalized their children with their personal beepers or personal alarms.

Such a device didn’t save Cassie Bier’s children. The bill vanished while on her way to string Christmas lights at a friend’s house near St. Louis. As her body was found cast off, still wailing. Not long after that, her body was found in a litter-strewn lot not far from her suburban home.

The real lesson to be learned is that kids don’t feel safe at home when they bring up dangers.

Some parents have equipped their children with personal alarm systems. A young girl who was murdered.

Aftershocks taper; old L.A. roads make new travel routes

By Amanda Covarrubias

LOS ANGELES — Commuters got a lift from an old road, thousands lined up for emergency food stamps Monday and earthquake-stricken Southern California enjoyed a two-day respite from bone-jolt ing aftershocks.

More than 3,000 people waited patient­ly in the parking lot at Dodger Stadium to apply for a one-time allotment of food stamps, but a new three-day waiting period left some disappointed and hungry.

"I still have to wait to get something to eat. It doesn't make sense," said Deborah Dennis of South Central Los Angeles. "The lines at the food kitchens are just as long. I have to wait three days to find out if we can go home and have a full meal."

The wait was enforced after authorities arrested five people Saturday for investigation of trying to buy food stamps from recipients at a discount.

The waiting period allows the county Department of Public Social Services to check by computer whether applicants have already applied or meet low-income and property requirements.

Aid-seekers were told Monday they would be notified by mail whether they were approved or denied. Recipients last week were given food stamps on the spot after offering only minimal proof of need.

Fraud investigator Jacqueline Davis estimated about 1 percent of those applying would be denied.

"It was an ablation before," she said. "I'd spot a face in line and say, 'Did I just see you here yesterday?' This way, since

L.A. residents might be back in their beds, but hardly anyone can sleep

By Brigitte Greenberg

LOS ANGELES — If New York is the city that never sleeps, Los Angeles is becoming the city that never sleeps well.

Los Angeles was jolted out of a sound slumber at 4:31 a.m. on Jan. 17 with an earthquake that measured 6.6 on the Richter scale, and some residents haven't had a good night's sleep since. Most say they've been kept busy with worry and recurrent middle-of-the-night aftershocks.

"I haven't been able to sleep," said Dr. Winston Alt of the Sleep Disorder Center at the University of California, Los Angeles, said;

"I haven't been able to sleep. I guess, because I'm still nervous," said Carolyn Greer, 42, whose home near the epicenter was damaged. "I think subconsciously I'm listening for an aftershock because I want to get up and run to my kids."

A magnitude 5.0 aftershock at 3:20 a.m. Saturday didn't help.

"Occasionally, I sleep all night, but I think it's because there's only so much the body can take," Mrs. Greer said.

Her 6-year-old daughter, Brittany, also has trouble sleeping and can nod off only in her parents' bed.

Mrs. Greer and her husband, Robert, 54, have repeatedly tried to put Brittany in her own bed. Every time, she comes plans she can't sleep alone and they capitulate.

"The earthquake has affected her. She feels safe sleeping in the bed with me and my husband. She's a big baby, though," Mrs. Greer said.

Her 10-year-old son, Robert Jr., has had no trouble snoozing, nor has her husband.

Mrs. Greer is not alone. Dr. Winston Alt of the Sleep Disorder Center at the University of California, Los Angeles, said many residents are having trouble sleeping.

"With a higher level of general anxiety, people are going to have a rougher time sleeping," Alt said. "With each aftershock, there is a reliving of that traumatic moment at 4:31 in the morning."

Another factor is that some earthquake victims whose homes were damaged have been forced to sleep in unfamiliar surroundings, like shelters or the homes of friends and relatives, Alt said.

"Anxiety is the main thing that the earthquake has caused," he said. "If you treat the anxiety, the insomnia should take care of itself."

Psychologist Chaytor Mason, a profes­ser at the University of Southern Califor­nia, said

"I'm just trying to get my house back into shape on the inside and the outside. Every time there's an aftershock I can see some more cracks in my house."

James Penney
Chatsworth homeowner

"It was a good day today," she said.

"As little as the world,"

Last week, traffic in the Santa Clarita area backed up for more than nine miles as motorists squeezed through the area on a narrow service road called Sierra Highway.

State officials celebrated the opening of the detour which resolves Interstate 5 to 40 percent of its pre-quake capacity. The freeway is the main artery between northern and southern California.

"California is open and ready for business," said Margie Torrelli, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Transportation.

"This (detour) is absolutely critical, not only right for business and tourism."

It will take six months to a year to rebuild the freeway overpass.

In other developments:

Lucy Jones, a seismologist for the U.S. Geological Survey, said the area was averaging two or three magnitude-3.0 aftershocks a day — compared to 150 of them on Jan. 17. She described the aftershock pattern as normal and said it would continue to taper off, although there could be another 5.0 in the coming weeks.

-Metrolink officials opened the Vincent Grade-Acton station in northern Los Angeles County. Built by naval engineers from Port Hueneme, it is the fourth station constructed in the Antelope Valley since the quake, which caused riverside to sink.

-Richard Andrews, director of the state Office of Emergency Services, said 215,808 people had registered for federal assistance, exceeding in only nine days the six-month total of applicants from Hurricane Andrew.

-Fourteen schools in the Los Angeles Unified School District reopened after two weeks of extensive structural inspections. At least 21 quake-damaged schools in the sprawling district remain closed, but officials said some of those campuses will reopen later this week.

-James Wirt, director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, said the government will meet with state officials this week to discuss long-term recovery plans. Assistant Secretary Ron Brown will arrive on Wednesday to join the talks.

"It's the two-week anniversary of the earthquake," he said at a Monday briefing. "We're still here. We're still working very hard."

Meanwhile, the rebuilding went on Monday.

At a Home Depot store in heavily damaged Northridge, hundreds of residents bought supplies to repair their houses.

"I'm just trying to get my house back into shape on the inside and the outside," said James Penney, 42, of Chatsworth.

"Every time there's an aftershock I can see some more cracks in my house."
