Harmony? New owner's development plans for tiny town shake up residents

Associated Press

HARMONY - There's been precious little harmony in this Central Coast enclave since a Hollywood developer bought the tiny town a few months ago.

Harmony, where the population sign claims just 18 residents, would be a profoundly different place if Samuel Marian Mehdizadeh succeeds in his plans for the bucolic community located south of Hearst Castle.

Mehdizadeh already owns the block-long downtown, the tiny wedding chapel, the shuttered restaurant and the two houses. He hopes to close escrow on 700 acres of adjacent grazing land that rolls to the ocean.

The developer wants to turn the town into something like a world peace theme park. Performers would display their customs, crafts and cuisine. Foreign guests would come for extended stays and City Hall would be a forum for talking about world problems. There also would be a slaughterhouse - a testing ground for his theory on violence prevention.

If you kill 200 chickens during the day, at night you're not going to want to go out and shed more blood.
Club offers opportunity to earn radio license

The Cal Poly Amateur Radio Club is offering aspiring radio operators an opportunity to become licensed.

The club is sponsoring a five-week class which will cover all the material necessary to pass the Technician (No-Code) Exam. The class will meet 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. on Monday and Wednesday evenings from Jan. 12 through Feb. 11. The cost is $5, plus the purchase of a book, which runs about $25.

The exam will be administered Feb. 11. The testing fee is $6. Those taking the exam are not required to attend the class.

The class meets at the County Emergency Operations Center To get there, turn west off of Highway 1 at the "County Operations Center, Sheriff's Department" sign on Kansas Avenue. The Center is located a half mile down on the left.

For more information, call 754-2737.

Broken water pipe causes circuit board short

A water pipe that broke early Sunday night in the Ag Business building 191 caused two control circuit boards to short out. Repairs will cost Cal Poly approximately $1,000 per board.

The upper piping in the building's heating system couldn't support the higher water pressure resulting from Utilidor, Chief Engineer for Facilities Services Dennis Elliot said.

"The pipes were probably original," Elliot said, "and couldn't handle the higher pressure because of poor installation work."

The flooding was limited to a few rooms and was considered not that severe, according to Mary Siegel, a facilities services spokesperson.

Cal Poly to offer course specific to Central Coast vineyards

This quarter, a new College of Agriculture course will instruct students in methods of tackling pest management and its related problems that attack wine grape vineyards, specifically those on the Central Coast.

Fruit science professor Jo Ann Wheatley has opened the class to enrolled students and also to the public through Extended Education. The class meets Thursdays from 5 to 9 p.m.

The laboratory and lecture will focus on current post-control techniques and theories as well as potential new control methods.

To enroll in the class (FRSC X414), call Cal Poly's Extended Education office at 756-2953. The course fee is $550. For more information, call Wheatley at 756-6732.

enough money, they must volunteer all of their time," she said.

LaBarbera said she doesn't want this budget cut to destroy the galerie's reputation, but knows she must fulfill her obligations based on available resources. She has had to tell some artists with contracts that they won't be able to display their work due to the situation.

"I've held off (telling them) until now," she said. "We had bookings until 2000."

LaBarbera said the visual arts program is an important one to Cal Poly and that is why she wants to see the galerie continue with the proper funding. A successful galerie means bringing in professionals as well as displaying student work. LaBarbera said that student work is wonderful, but can't be displayed all of the time.

"The best way to take advantage of what I can offer (as a curator) is to be exposed to things that you hired me to teach you," she said.

LaBarbera said that in order to be "well-rounded," students need to take advantage of the galerie's art. She advises visiting the galerie for a "10 minute culture break."

The galerie, upstairs in the U.U. across from the Information Desk, will be open 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Wednesdays and from 12 p.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays beginning Jan. 24.

The galerie's first show of the quarter, "Fire & Ice," will run Jan. 24 through March 8.

LaBarbera welcomes all students to the reception on Saturday, Jan. 24, from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m.

Many chances to give during donor month

By Diane Farnsworth
Daily Staff Writer

A few minutes spent answering questions, a slight needle prick and a lasting feeling that could keep you warm even in this cold weather. This month four blood drives will take place on campus, as National Volunteer Blood Donor Month continues.

According to Mona Klemm, director of donor resources at Tri-Counties Blood Bank, less than 5 percent of healthy Americans eligible to give blood actually donate.

"Tri-Counties Blood Bank is trying to make it easier for students to give blood by coming to Cal Poly," Klemm said.

"We get a lot of student support and have several drives scheduled this spring," Klemm said. "This month blood drives will be held Jan. 20, 21, 27 and 28. There are many reasons to donate blood, including the great need for the life-sustaining fluid. Approximately 40,000 units of blood are used throughout the country every day. The Tri-Counties alone require 2,000 units of blood every month."

"Our county depends upon healthy volunteer blood donors," Klemm said. Former Cal Poly student and Cambria resident Ron Moore has donated blood more than 70 times.

"I donated once or twice in college, however what really got me started was an incident in 1983. A Cambria resident was badly burned following an explosion and required lots of blood. After that I became a regular," Moore said. "It's easy to do and it's always needed. Plus, the nurses treat you well.

Moore said he feels there is no excuse for healthy individuals not to donate blood. Although an estimated eight million people donate

Defense lawyers have repeatedly offered to have Kaczynski admit he is the Unabomber in exchange for a sentence of life in prison without possibility of parole. The offers went all the way to U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno, who refused. Then, Kaczynski tried to hang himself in jail cell and decided to fire his lawyers and represent himself.

"Everything changed last week because Ted Kaczynski's mental state changed," said Laurie Levenson, associate dean of Loyola University Law School in Los Angeles. "These prosecutors, who were very confident until then, felt their agreement if a plea is to be accepted."

"They can ask the families to make a statement supporting a plea," she said. "Everything changed last week because Ted Kaczynski's mental state changed," said Laurie Levenson, associate dean of Loyola University Law School in Los Angeles. "These prosecutors, who were very confident until then, felt their agreement if a plea is to be accepted."

"They can ask the families to make a statement supporting a plea," she said. "Given the jury they have, they probably still won't get the death penalty," she said, noting that a number of jurors were reluctant to impose the ultimate sentence.

"For those who don't like the death penalty, seeing Ted Kaczynski in action representing himself may be enough," she said. "What Janet Reno has to consider is, Do I go through this long process with the odds against getting the death penalty, or do I end it here?"

A key factor may be the attitudes of victims and survivors. Levenson, a former federal prosecutor, said that lead prosecutor Robert Cleary and his team will most likely confer with the families, advising them of the pros and cons of going forward with a trial and seeking their agreement if a plea is to be accepted.

"Hey mom!" I shouted from the bedroom of my hotel room on New Year's Day. "Come here and take a look at this. It's the Float. Indeed, it was. I could barely contain my joy at seeing it. What I saw was the Rose Float that was made, designed and constructed by students in Cal Poly's Rose Float Club.

When I went to the first meeting they said it would feel good to see what you have done in motion on TV and to swing it in action for the first time. They were right. It did feel good. For a whole quarter I put my two cents worth in on the Float and there was the finished product moving down the street, during the Rose Parade on Jan. 1, 1998. It was a great feeling, too. Not the kind of feeling after you had a good round of no, this was better. It was the kind of feeling you get seeing a project that you worked long and hard on come out, right the first time. A project that and everyone liked, and which made you feel proud of what you worked on it.

For a whole quarter I went... and I worked. I went to all the meetings that the Rose Float Club had to offer. I went to all the lab days that went with going to the general meetings. Each and every Saturday, during lab days, I went out and helped out and tried to do what I could. But as a journalist major I always ended up asking where this part all worked out and... What I saw moving down the street was not what I had at first envisioned. I had only worked on the structure beneath the outside layer and I never envisioned it to have any moving parts on it at all, or ones that could be seen directly, like the wheels were. Elation came to me when I saw that what I had worked on was that piece of artwork moving down the street during the Rose Parade. It felt even better when I saw we won the Founder's Trophy. There was also the fact that over three million people were watching this float moving down the street along with me.

Club members did a really good job of what they worked hard. They were out there every Saturday stripping the bearings, the pistons, the gears, welding the metal together, saving metal to fit in the right places and at the right angles, and hauling away hundreds of dollars to get really heavy parts to fit where they wanted them. They were out there painting, drilling, sawing and cutting. And in the end, came the float they called "Countryside Joie de Vivre." It was 501, out of a long line of floats that were in the Rose Parade.

One might ask if all this drilling was worth it? Was all this painting worth it? Was all this worthwhile? It certainly was! For me it felt good to see the work that one worked on for a quarter come rolling down the street in the finished process and have it look as good as it did. I know I was overjoyed with the finished product and the rest of the Rose Float Club was too!

Feds to help train more computer workers

Providing up to $6 million in grants for industry groups that expand private-sector involvement in teaching U.S. students technology skills

Investing $3 million "seed money" for demonstration projects on how to train laid-off workers in other industries for high-tech jobs

Spending $8 million to expand an Internet site where employers can post job openings and workers can post resumes

Convening four town-hall meetings this year for representatives of business, education, government and companies to discuss information technology workforce needs

Riley, Daley and Higgins announced the initiatives at the University of California, Berkeley, which helped organize a two-day conference of government and industry officials on the shortage of skilled computer workers.

As part of the effort to attract new talent, several businesses are participating in a "job shadow" day, tied into Groundhog Day, in which students will follow high-tech workers around to get an idea of life in the workforce. (www.jobshadow.org)

Along with the grant money and training initiatives comes an attempt at attitude adjustment - persuading potential workers that high-tech isn't just for the propeller-head brainy set. That includes distributing a Microsoft Corp.-produced video starring actor Jimmy Smits that promotes computer-related jobs.

Before his dream can go forward, however, there's the matter of governmental review.

Art Trinidad, resource protection supervisor for San Luis Obispo County, said that Meh dizadeh can bring in livestock, farm buildings and a slaughterhouse because the land was zoned for agriculture.

But most of the other projects will require county permits, environmental impact reports and possibly zoning changes. The state Coastal Commission would have final say on development of the 700-acre parcel where the peace park would be built.
America Online files suit against three bulk e-mailers

Associated Press

NEW YORK — America Online sued three bulk e-mail companies, seeking to halt their practice of bombarding the online service's members with unsolicited messages.

AOL, the nation's largest online service provider, filed the suit Jan. 6 in federal court in Alexandria, Va., seeking an injunction and damages from the companies. The three firms are IMS of Knoxville, Tenn.; Gulf Coast Marketing of Baton Rouge, La.; and TSF Marketing and TDF Industries of Riverside, Calif.

The suit follows a victory for the online company last month against Over the Air Equipment Inc., which was enjoined from sending similar bulk e-mails to AOL members and forced to pay damages for spamming.

According to the suit, the three companies sent thousands of unsolicited e-mails to AOL members, a practice known as "spamming." They refused to halt their activities and used bogus e-mail addresses to evade AOL's filters designed to block such e-mails.

Vradenburg said AOL was seeking "substantial damages" from the three firms. "Enough to deter these people," he said.

AOL is the nation's largest online service with about 10 million members. Mass unsolicited e-mail makes up a significant portion of the 17 million daily e-mails the company handles.

"The spam makes it difficult to offer ways to lose weight, make money quickly or locate pornography," the suit said.

There are few qualifications a donor must meet to give blood.

Anybody in good health, 17 years or older and over 110 pounds can give blood," Kleinman said. "It's safe and relatively pain free."

The process is also easy. A nurse takes the donor's blood pressure, temperature, checks the iron level of his or her blood and draws the blood.

Kleinman said most people do not donate blood simply because they haven't been asked.

"We try to make it as easy as possible on the donor. We have mobile units that will come to the donor and we have regular blood drives," Kleinman said.

For more information about how and where to donate blood call the Tri-Counties Blood Bank at 543-4290.

NFL seeks eight-year TV deal by Josh Dubow

NEW YORK — The NFL is close to finalizing a new television deal that could be bigger than all its previous agreements combined.

The NFL is looking for an eight-year deal worth as much as $4.4 billion in contract with Fox, NBC, ESPN, and TNT that expires next month, though sources told The Associated Press on Monday on condition of anonymity.

Industry insiders predict at least a 70 percent increase in rights fees when the new deal is announced.

Wisconsin is one of the teams that could benefit from the new deal.

Super Bowl replay favors NFC again by Dave Goldberg

It's been nine seasons since John Elway has been to the Super Bowl. He has been here. His team. An AFC team still hasn't won.

When Elway and the Denver Broncos were pasted by the Giants, Redskins and 49ers after the 1986, 1987 and 1989 seasons, those were the third, fourth and sixth straight wins for NFC teams.

"You know how these things are," George Young, then general manager of the Giants, said after the third one. "They work in cycles. The AFC will start winning again." Well, Young left for the NFL front office last week. He worked it back to the Super Bowl on Sunday and in bigger fashion with last 13 straight NFC title games ending on 14. The early line has Green Bay 3-2 over the Colts. Why are the Packers such heavy favorites? They play in the NFC. Brett Favre is the NFL's best quarterback, as good as Elway, now, 37, was a decade ago. "Green Bay's defense is the league's best, now, after never surrendering a touchdown pass in 31 quarters."

The Denver team is the best that Elway has played on. Just having Terrell Davis to return the ball instead of Sammy Winder and Gerald Wilkins make it easy. The receivers — Rod Smith, Ed McCaffrey and Willie Green — don't have a moniker like the old 1998 team's "Wide Receiver Corps" as good as great and better. And Shannon Sharpe, the team's tight end, is as good as great. Can't be upended. Cover the offense, line by Gary Zimmerman, the touch/tackle, and center Tom Tolleson. You're on.

But Green Bay can score with anyone, can beat anybody. The Levens vs. Davis, Robert Brooks, Antonio Freeman and Derrick Mayes vs. the Denver wide receivers; and Mark Chmura vs. Sharpe at tight end. Can score on 3-2 for. Can beat the Panthers, Vikings, Saints, Giants, Cowboys, Texans.

Add an undernourished offensive line and it's pretty much a wash.

But defense is another story.

"We don't care about individual honors, we play to 'defense,'" says strong safety LeRoy Butler. The only other defender to make All-Pro. "We're just as happy when someone else makes a play." That's true. But it's also true that many of those outfield honors are defense time, players, starting with Gilbert Brown in 1987, in his game to the tune of 350 pounds. He's the reason Denver won the Super Bowl. Denver is the only team that surpassed the 40s got 33 yards on 18 attempts Sunday. There's also All-Pro B Reggie White, not the force as at 35 he was a decade ago but still a player who makes big plays — 1990, the last season's Super Bowl. Denver has a solid play- ers such as John Mobley, emerging in his second season as one of the NFL's few dominant defensive end not the backer Ray Crockett plus safeties Steve Atwater and Tyrone Braxon, the only two starters besides Elway who played with the Broncos in their last Super Bowl.
