Younger Bush visits Poly

The nephew of Republican presidential candidate George W. Bush came to Cal Poly Sunday to talk about his uncle’s campaign and to rally the student vote.

George P. Bush, 23, gave a brief speech in the University Union, and then answered questions and spoke with students. The oldest grandson of former President George Bush and son of Florida Gov. Jeb Bush has been traveling the country to speak about the presidential race and his uncle’s values and positions on issues. He noted the importance of getting younger generations involved in politics.

Bush started with one of Plato’s ideas, saying that the consequence of not getting involved in politics is the danger of being ruled by one’s inferiors.

“My uncle is a leader,” he said. “He has a record of accomplishments.”

The younger Bush’s own priority is education, and he said that his uncle asked for his help working on issues relating to it.

Bush graduated from Rice University in Texas in 1998 with degrees in history and political science. After college, he taught in a high school program designed for students who are at a high risk of dropping out. He is currently waiting to hear back from the 12 law schools to which he has applied.

“All of G.W.’s brothers and sisters are campaigning for him, but I’m the only one from my generation because I’m out of school now,” Bush said.

Bush does not think he will become as politically involved as some of his relatives. He said he has considered politics, and may do something on the local level, but that the presidential level is too intense.

“I’m just a normal 23-year-old just out of college worried about what kind of job I’m going to get,” he said.

He spent three months campaigning in New Hampshire and three weeks in California. Cal Poly is his 11 college out of 15 in the state. He has been traveling with his best friend from Houston, and will travel with his uncle the last few days before the March 7 primary.

The event was organized by the San Luis Obispo County Young Republicans in conjunction with the Cal Poly College Republicans. Most of the 20 students at the speech were members of these clubs.

“On the pad is to spread the conservative voice on campus and let people get an up-close feel about the candidates,” said Tamsi Simon, Cal Poly College Republicans president.

Donors shower local wildlife

Pacific Wildlife Care held a wildlife baby shower Sunday to raise money for food and products needed to properly rehabilitate sick, injured and orphaned wildlife.

PWC is a nonprofit volunteer organization of trained individuals who provide treatment to rehabilitate animals back to health for reintroduction into the wild. The organization is dependent on memberships and donations, and is licensed by the California Department of Fish & Game and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

“This annual event is called Baby Shower because so much is needed for young animals in rehab,” PWC member Vivian Thompson said. “The money raised today will go to food and supplies given directly to animals and birds in rehab.”

The event was held at the University Cooperative Extension Auditorium and featured tables with information about mammals, birds, reptiles and reptiles. The baby shower also included an activity table for children, along with wildlife videos.

Visitors had the opportunity to meet Sunshine, a 7-year-old red-tail hawk, and Miss Lu, a 3-year-old opossum. Sunshine will be in captivity for the rest of her life, but with some tucks and lifts.

Avila residents see future of town in booklet

By Megan Shearn
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

In a booklet made available by Uncal, Avila Beach residents can see what their town’s new face-lift will eventually look like. So far, the response has been a mixed bag of emotions.

“It think it’s just wonderful, just wonderful,” said Evelyn Phelan, a 50-year resident of Avila.

The booklet features color pictures of the Front Street Enhancement Project, created after Uncal excavated 40,000 gallons of oil under the beach and tore up Avila’s Front Street. Plans for the enhancement project include a pedestrian plaza, a fountain, stepped seating areas that curve into the sand, a rebuilt Avila Pier, new restrooms and a community park. A committee of Avila residents helped design the project.

Many old features will still be around, but with some tucks and lifts. The yacht club will still hold in place on the pier, and people can still have a good time at The Custom House and Mr. Ricks.

Phelan said she made some suggestions about the project to the committee.

“I wanted to see more trees, curbs, sidewalks and patterns,” she said.

Phelan got her wish.

The sidewalks are wider, making the street more pedestrian-friendly, and the streets are lined with broad-leaf trees.

“There’s nothing rarer than broad-leaf trees to bring a neighborhood together,” Avila resident Maridel Salsbury said.

Salsbury sat in on several meetings to put in her suggestions of the project. She traveled to different beach towns to bring ideas back to Avila.

“I hope it won’t become a Santa Barbara,” said six-year resident Monica Davies. “It can only hold so many people,” she said.

She hopes Avila won’t lose its small-town attitude as well.

Robert Martin, a fifth generation Avila resident, said he hopes the new look won’t make his hometown another viewless, high-rise beach town. "We don’t want a monstrosity of two-story structures by setting a maximum height of 25 feet," said Martin. Davies and Martin may fret about growth, but there are aspects about the new look that they each enjoy.

"There is more beach for people to enjoy, the restrooms are more modern and the architecture decor is more pleasing," Martin said. "I like the observation deck. I can bring my mom and dad, who are handicapped, and they can sit and enjoy the view," Davies said. And one feature will stay true. "The ocean is never going to change," Davies said.

"We have a great response. There are a lot of caring people in San Luis Obispo county." Bob Thomas said. "We've had a lot of interest in the project. We're hoping to get the money to build the center on. The center will still take it back." Davies added.

If anyone finds a fawn, the must call 543-WILD.

Claudia Novak, a PWC volunteer who helped care for the fawns, said, "Right now we need people to call 543-WILD to report a fawn if they see one. It will allow us to bring the fawns to PWC."

The wildlife shower provided a learning atmosphere for both children and adults.

"I heard about this event through a friend, and I wanted to come check it out," Sue Lonobe,s resident Mary Willohrs said. "My two boys are really into wildlife and the environment." A raised raffle money for PWC with prizes donated by Fancy Supply, The Novel Experience, New Frontiers and Pets Plus.

"I think the event turned out well," PWC member Gale Konloski said. "We've had a great response. There are a lot of caring people in San Luis Obispo County."

PWC received a grant from the California Department of Fish & Game to fund a center. However, the organization is still looking for land to build the center on. The center will have caging and a hospital for the treatment of animals, as well as an observation center.

"It will be great when the hospital is built. We will be receiving more animals," PWC president Claudia Dorr said. "Right now we rehabilitate all the animals in the homes of members. It really puts a strain on families."

PWC encourages anyone with questions about membership or a wild animal to call 543-WILD.

In a speech on Feb. 14 at the Sierra Club Headquarters in San Francisco, Sen. Bill Bradley stressed the importance of cleaning up the environment during the current economic boom.

"We are at a moment of great prosperity," he said, "and I say that now is the time to use that prosperity to secure our future. There is no wiser way to do that than to preserve and protect our environment."

Bradley, also a supporter of the Kyoto Protocol, believes in tougher automobile emissions standards as a way of improving air quality. In October, he told the Sustainable Energy Coalition, "We need new strategies to get car owners to get old clunkers off the road since they contribute disproportionately to pollution."

GOP presidential candidate Sen. John McCain does not support the Kyoto Protocol. However, according to Project Vote Smart, McCain supports the following principles: strengthening the Clean Water Act, encouraging development of alternatives to reduce pollution and strengthening emission controls on all gasoline or diesel-powered engines, including cars and trucks.

Freshman Kimberly Torrence, head of the John McCain campaign at Stanford, said, "McCain is calling for a plan to revitalize America's 379 national parks. His plan includes identifying and prioritizing park needs, setting goals and measurement standards with specific time frames to implement the plan.

"He also wants the people of California to be able to decide for themselves on the issue of offshore drilling for oil and not leave it in the hands of the national government," said Torrence.

More issues surrounding Gazette bias

How do you feel about abortion? How do you feel about gay/lesbian rights? That's what we thought. Everyone has a stance regarding these issues. And everyone needs to have access to the facts surrounding these issues.

The San Luis Obispo County Gazettes, the county's newest weekly newspaper, eliminated accessibility to these issues when it was forced to announce its policy of not printing pro-homosexual and pro-abortion content.

Newspapers are supposed to represent one thing: unbiased news coverage. With that in mind, let's look beyond the journalistic violation for a moment and examine the management issues.

The Gazette employees who resigned when the bias broke have all said they did not know their employer's stance. If they had, most of them, say they would not have taken the job. If they had known — that's the issue. David Weyrich, the Gazettes' owner, did not make the policy of not printing pro-homosexual, pro-abortion material known up front.

Since the nature of the bias is unusually severe, it should not have been left for employees to discover several months into their careers. In other words, refusing to print articles or ads that reflect a segment of the population, albeit a morally controversial segment, is just not fair.

Political bias, for example, happens. But that usually comes out in unbalanced coverage (but coverage nonetheless) and staff endorsements on the editorial page. Moral conviction is a noble undertaking, but does not belong in a newspaper. Moral conviction is a personal conviction and should have been done in the editorial page. Moral conviction is a noble undertaking, it provides an important "nud-"do" of sorts, by which we and our children might be guided.

I believe that the pathway to true understanding has many branches and transcends languages and religions. I cannot sweeping-ly condemn those who proclaim an alliance with one religion or another, for to do so would be judgmental and equally myopic. However, I do understand and concur with your rejection of the self-serving corruption of some aspects (and practitioners) of organized religion.

Finaly, for me I illustrate my point in an aged, but timeless expression: 'Don't throw the baby out with the bath water.' Please, think about this. Religion does not necessarily equal God. Drain out the bath water, but at all costs, seek out, save and embrace what matters.

And God does matter.

Cover bands are nothing but glorified thieves

Most musicians use their music as a vehicle to express emotions and experiences. Others, such as the bands showcased on MTV's "Ultimate Cover Band," choose to copy someone else's song. Though this may not be illegal, it does not make them great musicians.

"Sweet Dreams are Made of These." Order's "Blue Monday" and Marilyn Michael's "Faith," Orgy covered New Order's "Blue Monday" and Marilyn Manson covered the Eurythmics' "Sweet Dreams Are Made of These." Obviously, if a song was once a hit, there is a good chance it will be a hit again. The bands who cover songs written by others are just trying to cash in without having to be creative. Orgy and Marilyn Manson, in case you haven't noticed, have disappeared from the spotlight. Why do you think that is? It's because the songs they actually write themselves aren't appealing to pop culture.

The fact that MTV is promoting this form of musical robbery may not be surprising, but it is disappointing. Consider this Limp Bizkit, Orgy and Marilyn Manson became famous by singing songs written by someone else. Not only that, they were previously popular, hit songs. Limp Bizkit covered George Michael's "Faith," Orgy covered New Order's "Blue Monday" and Marilyn Manson covered the Eurythmics' "Sweet Dreams Are Made of These." It was enough that they ran videos of bands copying other songs. Now they want bands to compete against each other playing someone else's song. It shows a lack of artistic ability and pride. Anyone can go to a music store and buy the sheet music to a popular song. It takes practice to write themselves the music, but not creativity.

Furthermore, the show brings MTV to an all-time low. It was bad enough that they ran videos of bands copying other songs. Now they want bands to compete against each other playing someone else's song. It shows that the bands can play instruments and memorize someone's song. I'm not saying that I don't enjoy listening to bands such as Limp Bizkit or Orgy. But it's ridiculous when a band becomes famous because of musical plagiarism. MTV's Ultimate Cover Band is just proof that this is the case. Playing another band's song is OK. It's only acceptable if the song is played for fun, not for money and fame.

Understand full truth of Gazettes before taking a stand

Editor,

I laughed when I read the piece regarding the infamous Gazette newspapers in today's Mustang Daily.

And when I heard about the anti-Weyrich flyers, asking Cal Poly students to save freedom of speech and cancel the paper, I chuckled.

I'm sorry to say, but nothing is going to change in this area because we haven't scratched the surface of the real issues at hand. The paper is getting as many compliments for its policy (for not printing material promoting homosexual or abortion) as it is in complaints. "The advertisers will come back," Gazette Chief Operating Officer Todd Hansen bragged at a meeting of the Central Coast Press Association last Friday. "We deliver to 126,000 homes a week. They're going to want to get on in that." Why don't we take a stand, and show these money-hungry moguls that dollars won't buy our freedom of speech?

Perhaps change would come if only local media would open its eyes to the real issues at hand. The media needs to present these issues to the public so it can decide what type of community it wants in the next century. Open your eyes Mustang Daily, look at students and get their voice on the current controversy.

Forget about Polg grade s who have a problem with Weyrich's policy and ask current students. Who knows, you might find someone who works for wannabe William Randolph Hearst and still goes to Polg today.

Someone who has to deal with ethical questions but needs money for books — and isn't scared to speak out against the real issues. Anyone who thinks they already do (in addition to admitting Weyrich is a joke). I would have never taken the position at the Gazette if I knew it was to be used as an "ideological organ for their points of view." That disagrees with every ethical decision I've learned in a journalism major at this school. Sure, lots of reporteurs find themselves at odds with the owners and publishers of their papers. We had a good thing going, though, at the Atascadero paper — until our editorial position fell into the hands of the Man. Nobody can force the Gazette to be fair or socially responsible if it doesn't want to. But I feel it is my job as a journalist to take a stand. Now I'm in the same boat as a lot of people who worked under "God." But the trouble-multi-million dollar man would never be. He wouldn't be able to let it be like to be in his shoes. He's never been in the field. He's never had to boot off the press people who questioned his ideas. Weyrich's givers, but that's another gift. His ears don't bleed when people slam the phone down in disgust when you say you're from the Gazette.

So thanks to him, I'm stuck up a creek without any options. I was looking for another job. Now I'm looking for another job. Unfortunately, for the one-time great staff of Ron Bast, Steve Martin, Emily Jackson and Alan Quinn, I already turned down offers at two other local papers. I had faith in that staff, because they had faith in me. But thanks to Weyrich being in for his "strong faith," they have all left their positions at the paper. I'm not alone, I am saddled to the idea that that's another gift. Their resignation is not only a huge loss for our hometown paper, but the entire family-oriented community as well. So who wants to go to work for a millenium? There are plenty of openings.

Parkinson's disease

Parkinon's disease is a neurological disorder that is not currently curable. However, there are treatments available that can help manage the symptoms. The disease can affect anyone at any age, but it most commonly affects people over the age of 60. Parkinson's disease is characterized by trembling, stiffness, and slow movement. The cause of the disorder is not yet fully understood, but it is thought to be a combination of genetic and environmental factors.

There is still much research being done into the causes of Parkinson's disease and how to treat it more effectively. Current treatments include medication, physical therapy, and surgery. While these treatments can help manage the symptoms of Parkinson's disease, there is no cure. Many people with Parkinson's disease are able to live normal lives, but the disease can progress over time and eventually lead to disability.

The University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA) Parkinson's Disease Center is a leading research and treatment center for Parkinson's disease. They offer a range of services for people with Parkinson's disease, including medication management, physical therapy, and cognitive therapy.

'Cradle Will Rock' delivers powerful message with a cast of Hollywood's best actors

By Karin Driessen
MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

An Italian fascist sells paintings to American capitalists to raise money for Mussolini, while the American government suspects there are Communists in the Federal Theater Program. These are just two of many subplots in Tim Robbins' star-studded, entertaining film "Cradle Will Rock."

Set in 1930s New York, and based on actual events, the movie chronicles the events surrounding a Federal Theater Program musical, "The Cradle Will Rock," from which the plot of the musical parallels the real-life events of steel workers' strikes and uprisings.

Robbins obviously sympathizes with the actors and workers, but likes a good job of also capturing the rich and famous. Each individual character is unique and likable, working in an ensemble. The acting is good, but the random assortment of scenes leaves several loose ends to be tied by the viewer. The movie centers around the musical, directed by the boisterous and no-nonsense 22-year-old Ossie Davis (played energetically by Angus MacFadyen) and produced by the more responsible and shaky John Houseman (Cary Elwes). The cast of the musical is composed primarily of down-and-out actors who have gotten jobs with the help of a government theater program, WPA Theater. Designed to put them back to work and spread live theater around the country.

The musical, written by Marc Blitzstein (Hank Azaria), attracts some attention from the government due to its scintillating political nature and worker-sympathetic content. Along with other theater programs, such as "The Revolt of the Beavers," it is investigated for communist infiltration by the Dies Committee in Washington.

For months, the committee has been listening to testimony by para-noid theater employee Hael Huffman (Joan Cusack) concerning "American" content in the theater. Huffman, a painfully serious woman, along with frustrated precursor plays the role of Gordon Cano. This song is not that long and doesn't have more than four letters on it. It is very, very short, and compared to the album's title track, it is a masterpiece.

The record opens with "Hollywood," a surf rock song, while "Forbidden" is a punk that Green Day began with Ramones songs, the kind of pseudo-punk that Green Day began with before discovering the beauty of catchy choruses.

The underwhelming bliss continues with "Mosh Pit," the only actual rock song on the album. One might enjoy it more after getting knocked silly by an elbow to the skull.

One positive aspect of this album is that it features a variety of genres—"New Generation," for example, is a surf rock song, while "Forbidden" is Beatles-esque. Another notable trait is that not only four of the 15 songs run longer than three minutes. Coincidentally, these four songs are the album's best. "All I Want" is a four-piece acoustic track. "In the Dark" is reminiscent of the Mezzanine, and "A Story" is an insidious dream, while, in other words, it's a jingle you know better than a full bottle of Vodka! (Note: Not everything on "Freak Magnet" is new; the Violent Femmes have released seven records in their 20 years of existence, one would think they would have developed a unique sound, rich with melody and fine in texture. Sadly, this is not the case. The band's performance on "Freak Magnet" displays almost no musical talent and does absolutely nothing for the listener.

Hockey images too violent for the Mustang Daily

Editor,
What Marty McSorley did to Donald Brashear was horrific. However, I feel that the image of Brashear on the ice with a bloody head was worse.

I was very disappointed to see that image in the Mustang Daily on Thursday. McSorley's hit was a concussion but not a gashing wound. Hockey, a non-contact sport, is playing on ice. It does not need a more violent image from the media. Those of us who watch the game are given a view of what happened in Monday night's contest.

We are all happy with the suspension handed to McSorley. That is not what we like about the game, though. Hockey is a mix of finesse and speed. The game should be admired for the talent of the players, not the violence that the media so loves. I would reshape the image in the Mustang Daily on Thursday. McSorley's blow left a screen image from the media. Those of us who watch the sport are disgusted by the violence of the players, not the violence that the media so loves.  Enough Dan Marino insults

Editor,
Living a lifelong fan of the Miami Dolphins and a distant relative of Dan Marino, must ask, "What is your problem with him?"

You write all these nasty remarks and opinions about the poor guy, a talented, innovative team player who was playing a game for a young, inexperienced group of fourth- and fifth-round draft picks. You seem to place all the team's failures on his shoulders, when in reality he should be put equally on the offensive, defense and special teams squad respectively.

I see, a quarterback can only do so much, especially with a talented and inexperienced team.

Mr. Nolan, what is the apparent hate that you have for his article regarding his notoriety, etc.? I don't think I'm in the past. I basically understand this negative focus on Dan Marino way out here in San Luis Obispo, a long way from the Atlantic Coast, especially among a bunch of 49er fans. It would be like personally attacking Patrick Ewing of the New York Knicks. Where is the relevance in that?

Long Beach State has only one loss in the Big West, and beat the Mustangs in their first meeting this season, 75-61.

Cal Poly does have a few things in its favor, though. Both games are in Mott Gym. The Mustangs could feel much better about Pacific this time around since Cal Poly has a hard time winning at Pacific.

The Mustangs' final home game is Saturday, when Cal Poly faces Long Beach State. The 49ers have already locked up a Big West Conference Tournament bid and may want to rest reserves for their post season run. The Mustangs are also the last home appearance for shooting guard Mike Weinko.

The senior will close out his Mustang career as the all-time leading scorer in school history.

Mustang Daily lacks swimming coverage

Editor,
Arriving home on Sunday morning after a third-place finish for the men's team at the Big West Conference Championships and coming within 90 points of second-place Pacific in the championships, I thought that maybe we would get a good article.

Even having Steve Stemberger win two events (100 and 200 breaststroke) and numerous other male and female swimmers qualify for finals and swim lifetime bests, an article was not written. I have to ask myself, what will it take to get some coverage and thus exposure for a team few people know about?

Do we need to have a perfect men's team so that we win a Big West Championship to get some publicity? Or is it just our fate that we happen to compete in a low-spectator sport and must stand out from the crowd? Our accomplishments become known only to ourselves, friends and family? Or will we get some reward, simply an acknowledgment, that without scholarships, sponsors or even a full coaching staff we manage to be more successful than most of our fully funded sports programs at Cal Poly?

I can only ask myself and wonder when we will no longer go unnoticed.

Trevor Cardinal is a Cal Poly swimmer.

Cal Poly lost to the Vandals 84-76, dropping the Mustangs a game behind UC Irvine for the fourth and final spot in the Big West tournament.

The loss means that if Irvine splits its final two games vs. last-place CSU Fullerton and North Texas, which sits in fifth place in the Big West Conference's Eastern Division, the Mustangs would need to sweep their final two games vs. Pacific and Long Beach State.

Pacific, which currently sits in third place, beat the Mustangs 87-66 earlier this season.

Baseball drilled by No. 20 Loyola Marymount

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF REPORT

The Cal Poly baseball team had a rough time handling the powerful bats of No. 20 Loyola Marymount, losing 16-13 and 16-6.

The Lions set a new school record Saturday, hitting seven home runs as a team, breaking their old record of five in a game. Designated hitter Jeff Walker, second baseman Anthony Angil and first baseman Kris Zacuto all had two home runs. Angel's second home run was a grand slam and gave him a career-high seven RBIs.

The Mustangs opened the game scoring two runs off of Lions starter Michael Schutt. But Schutt settled down and scattered 11 hits while striking out seven and not allowing a walk in seven innings for the victory.

Cal Poly starter Josh Morton never made it out of the first inning, recording only one out while surrendering seven earned runs on five hits.

The Mustangs record drops to 3-10 as Loyola Marymount moves to 8-3.

Cal Poly will play host to Temple University this weekend. The Mustangs are set to play at SLO Stadium Saturday at 1 p.m. and Sunday at 10 a.m.

Women's basketball splits two home games

By Christian von Treskow

MUSTANG DAILY STAFF WRITER

The Cal Poly women's basketball team split two home games this weekend.

It was business as usual for the No. 10 UC Santa Barbara women's basketball team Friday as it dismantled the Mustangs 85-63.

The Gauchos had five players score in double figures and held Cal Poly to just 21 points in the first half.

Even more impressive than their 20-game winning streak is that the Gauchos played without American star Erin Buescher. Buescher sat out of the contest with a sore Achilles tendon. She leads the team with 17.6 points per game and is a two-time Big West Player of the Year.

Any slack left by Buescher's absence was picked up by UCSB's all-time scoring leader, Kristen Riche, who came up big, hitting 11 of 19 shots for 28 points. She was also active in the paint, pulling down eight rebounds and blocking two shots.

From the opening tip-off, the Gauchos backcourt initiated the fast-break offense that has worn down Big West opponents all season. Yet with 10 minutes remaining in the first half, the Mustangs only trailed 16-15.

However, things slowly began to work against the Gauchos as Loyola Marymount moves to 8-3.

With 17.6 points per game and is a two-time Big West Player of the Year.

Any slack left by Buescher's absence was picked up by UCSB's all-time scoring leader, Kristen Riche, who came up big, hitting 11 of 19 shots for 28 points. She was also active in the paint, pulling down eight rebounds and blocking two shots.

From the opening tip-off, the Gauchos backcourt initiated the fast-break offense that has worn down Big West opponents all season. Yet with 10 minutes remaining in the first half, the Mustangs only trailed 16-15.

However, things slowly began to work against the Gauchos as Loyola Marymount moves to 8-3.

The Mustangs are set to play at SLO Stadium Saturday at 1 p.m. and Sunday at 10 a.m.
